VON HINDENBURG DEAD; HITLER SEIZES POWER

Today

"A Fine Old Man."
"Prompt Hangings."
That Aryan Question.
An Experiment Suggested.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

VON HINDENBURG, the old fighting general, President of the German republic, is dead.

It is reasonable to believe that this fine old man's death was hastened by the Dollfuss murder. Von Hindenburg was a soldier, a man of honor, a true German of the old school. Murder and oppression were not in his line. He should not be held responsible for the acts of those that stole away his authority in his old age.

The German nation will continue to be proud of Hindenburg, as it always has been, and to respect the loyalty that he showed in the performance of duty.

HITLER HAS named himself President of the German republic, to succeed General von Hindenburg.

A "republic" in which the president selects himself and establishes his election by his own single vote is not much of a republic.

But, when you start out being a dictator, you must keep on in a path, sometimes long, sometimes short, in which there is no turning back.

TWO AUSTRIAN NAZIS tried by court-martial, one convicted of murdering Dollfuss, the other of "high treason," were hanged within three hours of the verdict. These prompt executions have been a part of the Dollfuss program. Just before his death he hanged a young Socialist workman three hours after the man was convicted. Such extraordinary promptness sometimes frightens criminals, sometimes it increases crime, by causing desperation. The British always hang, never seem to hurry, never wait unnecessarily. That plan works well.

SIR GRAFTON ELLIOT SMITH, British authority on anthropology and ethnology, addressing learned men of all countries, ridicules the emphasis that Germany puts upon what Sir Grafton calls "Germany's Aryan policy."

It is foolish to argue about races now since no race has been able to maintain absolute purity through the ages. The so-called "Aryan" peoples, wandering and fighting all over the world, is probably the most mixed of all.

THE GREAT GERMAN scientist, Haecel, believed that the human race appeared, coming up from lower forms of life, at various places on the earth at different times, thus creating the main branches of mankind.

One learned Britisher seems to prove that the Aryan race from the chimpanzee the most intelligent, also the most deficient in morals of all the higher apes. The African race comes from the gorilla, and the Mongolian race from the orang-outang. The important question is, what do these various races DO, what do they achieve, how do they behave themselves, whether they descend from Adam and the other unaccounted-for humans whom Adam's children married, or from lower forms of life.

SPAIN, WORRIED about Communist outbreaks, especially in the north, is preparing for a "Communist Red Day." It would be interesting to know just what the Communist party expects and wants, what its plans are, apart from a general program of dissatisfaction. This is not said in criticism or contempt. A party or a theory, however vague which springs up in so[illegible] parts of the world has a mean[illegible]

THOUGHTFUL COMMUNISTS cannot advocate "common ownership of property." If you divided up tomorrow everything in the United States, or any other country, without providing for management of production and distribution, you would have chaos and famine soon. There has never been a real Communistic experiment. Russia is far removed from it, being simply a dictatorship in which nobody except a few rulers actually OWNS anything.

IT MIGHT BE well to select some small country, if it would consent, and let Communistic philosophers try their theories there, fully and completely, with reasonable financial assistance, and see how it would work out.

Thus far men have attained results because they have been selfish for themselves, solicitous for their children, greedy for money, ambitious, seeking distinction. If there is any better way of making human beings work, and progress it would be desirable to know about it.

CANADA HAS borrowed $50,000,000 from American banks at 2 per cent interest, and is proud, with good reason.

New York, the biggest, richest city in the world, has to pay higher interest than that, borrowing from its own New York City bankers.

What is it that makes Canada so much safer than New York? Every man who understands international finance knows that if anything like a collapse happened to the United States, the British Empire would crumple up in sympathy, Canada included.

NEW YORK CITY, adapting the "new era" idea that paternalism is the best "ism," teaches children to swim and teaches housewives to cook. Excellent work for teaching children to swim may save their lives; teaching women to cook is especially needed in the United States, the home of "the world's worst cooking," and will save many stomachs and lengthen many lives.

His a pity that nobody, not even the best universities, have ever learned to teach children of all ages to think.

'Model Boys' Charged With Murder of Dormont Man

By AL GOUGH
Staff Correspondent.

CANTON, O., Aug. 2.—The wheels of justice moved swiftly today to avenge the death of Ernest Schwarz, Dormont (Pa.) gold trader, shot down, according to authorities, by two 15-year-old Massillon (O.) boys whose career of crime lasted only three weeks.

Charges of first degree murder were filed today against the boys—William Lloyd Gruber and Willard Tschan—by Coroner T. C. McQuate. The Stark County grand jury, now in session, will hear the case next Monday, it was announced by A. C. Barthelmeh, assistant prosecutor, and the boys will go on trial probably within the next two weeks.

Termed one of the most cold-blooded killings in the annals of Stark County, authorities set about to determine a reason for the crime.

MODEL YOUTHS

The boys—both students at Washington High School, Massillon—were considered, in a sense, model youths. Tschan, son of Willard Tschan and grandson of Massillon's leading grocer, Fred Tschan, had been a leader in scholastic affairs. His school grades, he told County Prosecutor George Graham, were always in the 90s, and together with young Gruber, only a few months ago, he successfully promoted an amateur stage production in Massillon known as the "Junior Frolics."

In response to questions by Prosecutor Graham last night, Tschan attempted, in a way, to psychoanalyze himself. He said:

"I don't know what made me do it. It wasn't the money—I

Cyclone at Resort Hurts Vacationists

BALTIMORE, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—A freak cyclone today struck Hickory Point, a summer colony near here, wrecked half a dozen houses, injured approximately a dozen people and buried a number of vacationists under a mass of debris.

The twister, which struck without warning, was preceded by a huge wave which swept up Gray's Creek. Residents said it was "10 feet high and 100 yards long."

MISS DRESSLER WILLS $300,000

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—The actual value of the estate of Marie Dressler, actress, filed for probate today, was not given, but was estimated to be at least $300,000.

Mamie Cox, Negro maid who was in Miss Dressler's service for a quarter of a century, was bequeathed $35,000 and all the actress' wearing apparel. Jerry Cox, the maid's husband and chauffeur and house man for the screen star, was left $15,000 and her automobiles.

Alan B. Walker, a friend of long standing, who with Mrs. Walker was at the bedside when Miss Dressler died last Saturday in Santa Barbara, was named

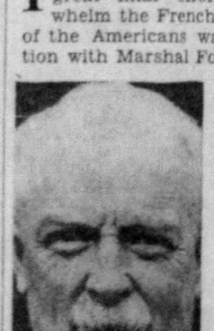
LONDON, Aug. 2.

IN THE early summer of 1918, when the issue of the great final effort of the German army to overwhelm the French and British armies before the arrival of the Americans was still in doubt, I had a conversation with Marshal Foch, in the interval of one of our conferences at Versailles, about some of the personalities of the war.



Lloyd George

I asked him what he thought of Gen. Ludendorff, the thunder of whose massed guns at Chateau Thierry was at that moment reverberating in the distance. It was not a great distance—less than from Oxford to London.

His answer was that Ludendorff was "un bon soldat" (a good soldier). Then I asked him:

"What about von Hindenburg?"

He replied:

"Un grand patriot." (A great patriot).

A great tribute from one great foe to another! Foch's remark was true of both.

Now the last of the two opposing "grand patriots" who were arrayed in deadly conflict with each other, each for his own Fatherland, [illegible] passed away. They had on[illegible] common. They had no thought for self. The[illegible]

CHANCELLOR GRABS REINS AS GERMANY MOURNS FOR 'GRAND OLD MAN'

'Der Fuehrer' Head of Army, Hints Election

By H. R. KNICKERBOCKER
International News Service

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—Hindenburg is dead. Hitler is President and Chancellor both.

He is supreme commander of the army, representative head of the Reich and its executive chief as well. He is now at a long last, without let or hindrance, absolute master of Germany.

By a simple cabinet decree all provisions of the old constitution and the law concerning the succession to the presidency passed under the regime of the late Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher were set aside and Hitler, in effect, named himself President. This he did under the authority granted him by his own Nazi Reichstag which, after he came to power, passed an empowering act giving Hitler the right to decree laws altering the constitution.

Thus with one swift move Hitler settled all speculation as to how he would succeed to Hindenburg's power. Normally the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Dr. Erwin Bumke, would have been President pro tem until a new election.

Meanwhile reports spread that Hitler will call upon the nation to indorse his assumption of the presidency by a popular referendum to be held this month.

By his cabinet decree, Hitler swiftly abrogated that law and the only power in Germany which could have been an obstacle in his path has failed to act. The Reichswehr is agreeing to Hitler as they once agreed to Germany's first President, the Socialist Ebert.

KAISER SHAKEN BY DEATH

International News Service.

DOORN, Holland, Aug. 2.—Germany's once mighty war lord, the Kaiser, who fled from Germany to seek refuge on Dutch soil when his military forces collapsed and revolution faced him at home, telegraphed condolences today on the death of his wartime commander, who steadfastly remained at his post to save the Reich from disaster.

From his lodge here, where he has been in exile for several years, Wilhelm telegraphed to Col. Oskar von Hindenburg, son of President von Hindenburg:

"The Empress (Hermine) and I mourn deeply with you and the whole German people. A life extraordinarily blessed by God has found its fulfillment. The Crown Prince will bring our last compliments to the hero of Tannenberg, gone to eternity.

"Wilhelm, Imperator, Rex. (Emperor, King)."

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—(INS.)—The former Crown Prince of Germany will hasten to Neudeck to pay his respect to the dead Field Marshal, von Hindenburg, under whom he commanded an army during the war, Maj. von Mueldner, the former Crown Prince's aide, announced today that the head of the Hohenzollern family in Germany would go there to offer his condolences to the field marshal's bereaved family.

NEUDECK, Germany, Aug. 2.—President Paul von Hindenburg, Germany's great field marshal, died at 9 a. m. today, (4 a. m. Pittsburgh time).

To the man who had fought in his 86 years of life through every hell of war, death came quietly.

It slipped into the big yellow mansion on the hill of the estate von Hindenburg loved so well. It was this mansion that a grateful nation recently enlarged as a token of its gratitude.

At the bedside, when death came, were four state physicians and members of von Hindenburg's family, including his son, Col. Oskar von Hindenburg, and two daughters, Frau Irimeard von Brockhusen and Frau Anna Marie von Bentz.

STAMINA AMAZES

The physicians had done their best against a prostate gland disorder and the infirmities of old age. At the last all they could do was stand by, astonished that the strong old heart could stand out against these complications for so long. They had given up hope early last night.

HUEY LONG MOVES TO SEIZE NEW ORLEANS TAX AUTHORITY

MILITIA BACKS SENATOR'S NEW DRIVE

'I'm Napoleon,' Brags Kingfish; He's Crazy, Mayor's View

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Carrying out Senator Huey P. Long's threat to take over the tax authority in the city of New Orleans, the state today appointed tax assessors throughout the city to supersede the assessors elected by the city last January.

Backed up by the power of the mobilized National Guard, which already has seized the city voting registration office, William Rankin, of the Louisiana Tax Commission, announced the appointment of the state tax collectors to take charge in New Orleans, replacing the elected city board of assessors.

Senator Long recently announced this would be done as a result of Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley's refusal to recognize the legality of Gov. O. K. Allen's appointment of two Long lieutenants as assessors to fill vacancies caused by the deaths of two elected assessors.

Rankin announced that a "state assessor" will qualify in each assessment district of New Orleans, except the Fourth and Sixth districts, in which districts State Representative Joseph Weber and Long Ward Leader Henry Otnott were appointed by Gov. Allen last week.

Exclaimed Mayor Walmsley on being advised of the state administration's latest reprisal move against his city regime:

"This is new infamy and outrage. The law does not contemplate this latest illegal act of Senator Long through his tax commission.

"The anger of this madman knows no bounds."

'I'M NAPOLEON'

Rankin indicated that the state would at once discontinue the salaries of the elected city assessors. He said the elected assessors would be disregarded by the state agents in the making of city assessments. Mayor Walmsley said in a statement:

"It appears that each day Long is adding some new infamy and outrage to his long list of acts of oppression and usurpation in the city of New Orleans. The anger of this madman knows no bounds. Night before last in a radio address, like all crazy people, he likened himself to Napoeon."

Meanwhile, Mrs. Willys, whose fi[rst] husband earns his living as [a] court clerk on Long Island, told [the] story of their first meeting. She said frankly:

"It was love at first sight, on my part, at least."

Langer's Wife Candidate for Governor

MRS. WILLIAM LANGER

To the cheers of supporters of her husband, who dramatically stepped aside yesterday and relinquished the Republican gubernatorial nomination he won overwhelmingly in the primaries, Mrs. Langer was named by the Republican State Central Committee to make the race against Thomas H. Moodie, Williston publisher, the Democratic candidate.

Convicted of conspiracy to solicit political contributions from federal relief workers, Langer was disqualified from serving as Governor and his right to be a candidate had faced a court test.

Earthquake Felt Along Maine Coast

PORTLAND, Me., Aug. 2.—(INS.)—A slight earthquake lasting several seconds was felt today on a 40-mile front along the Maine coast. The quake rattled dishes and windows in hundreds of homes from Cape Elizabeth to Ogunquit. Scores of housewives scurried to the street in alarm.

FAHEY STARTS 'FIX' TERM

Charles F. Fahey, failing in his appeal from a sentence to a year in jail for embracery in connection with the trial of the "Three Toms," began serving his term today.

Fahey had appealed from his conviction and Judge James H. Gray's sentence to Superior Court. The higher court, however, upheld the sentence.

Fahey was found guilty after Charles L. O'Connell, of Leetsdale, who pleaded guilty to embracery in the "Three Toms'" case, testified that Fahey gave him slips bearing the names of four jurors, which the prosecution charged came from Tom Coyne. The prospective jurors were to be told to "take care of Coyne," according to testimony.

The Toms—Coyne, Goslin and Dolan—were convicted of gambling. Goslin and Dolan are serving jail terms, while Coyne awaits hearing of his appeal.

As a precaution against imposters who might attempt to claim a share of her estate and against relatives she did not wish to remember, Miss Dressler stated in her will, dated in May, 1934, that she disinherited all persons who might lawfully be determined as heirs at law, those she named in the will excepted.

Mrs. Robert Morris Phillips, New York society woman and intimate friend of the actress, was given a diamond bracelet. Nella Webb, astrologist and advisor of Miss Dressler, was willed $5,000. Ida Sutcliff, a cousin, was bequeathed $5,000, and May Duryea, an old friend, was left $5,000.

A valuable diamond and pearl brooch was left to Miss Dressler's close companion, Frances Marion, who wrote the script for several of Marie's screen successes.

The actress cancelled unpaid notes she held against Starr Anderson and Newell Van Derhoff, her real estate agents.

Miss Dressler ordered the executor to sell all her properties. After the bequests are made, the actress' sister, Bonita Ganthony, residing in England, is to have the remainder of the estate.

the murder of her daughter-in-law, Rheta G. Wynekoop, told a court she was guiltless of the murder.

The denial was made in a written answer, filed in the United States District Court yesterday, to the suit of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company which seeks to cancel a $10,000 policy for Rheta. The policy named Dr. Wynekoop and her son, Earle, Rheta's husband, beneficiaries.

The suit is based on charges that the policy was obtained through fraud and that certain important facts in regard to Rheta's physical condition were withheld from the company.

'Hula Man' Held In Circus Killing

WAYNESBURG, Pa., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Edward Jones, 57-year-old Negro billed until last week as a "hulu" man in a circus, is under arrest in Waynesburg as a murder suspect.

Police arrested him in connection with the death of Omar Eddings, 57, elephant trainer with the circus, who died following injuries suffered in a fight on the circus lot on July 23.

LABOR BLAMES GOVERNMENT IN STRIKES

10,300,000 Now Idle, Federation Reports In Job Survey

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Many of the strikes harrassing industry were attributed by the American Federation of Labor today to what it called the administration's failure to obtain for workers "their legal right to organize."

The federation said in its monthly survey of business.

"The difficult problem of labor relations still seems far from a satisfactory solution."

The survey said there were 10,300,000 unemployed now, compared with 10,100,000 last October, adding:

"Nothing in the business picture at present gives promise of substantial business improvement in the near future.

"The present situation is a challenge to the administration to give us a plan by which industry, labor and the government may co-operate to restore business. When private business is not able to resume its functions, then society is forced to take over the means of production."

An increase in the general wage level was seen by the federation as the only solution of the unemployment problem.

New Peace Move In Truck Strike

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Immediate termination of the truck drivers strike was proposed today by the employers' advisory committee, which recommended a wage scale of 50 cents an hour for drivers and 40 cents an hour for all other workers in certain classifications.

This new plan was announced simultaneously with sporadic picketing by strikers, resulting in the beating of four truck operators and the disabling of several vehicles. Eight pickets were under arrest at noon.

Each employer, the committee proposed, shall deal with "such representatives of his employes as his employes shall select in accordance with the provisions of Section 7-A of the NRA."

RULE IGNORES TEACHER ROW

HARRISBURG, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Dr. James N. Rule, superintendent of the Department of Public Instruction, had said today he has declined to intervene in the case of James J. Stewart, teacher at the Plumville High School, who was refused a permanent teacher's certificate by James J. Chapman, superintendent of Indiana County schools.

Charging unfairness, Stewart protested to Rule against Chapman's refusal to grant him a permanent certificate and asked for a hearing.

Stewart, 29-year-old graduate of Allegheny College, claimed Chapman charged him with being a "Bolshevik" during a class session several years ago and has since been antagonistic.

Retiring Officers Honored by Police

Two policemen, the oldest lieutenant and the oldest sergeant in point of service, were on the retired list today after South Side brother officers had honored them last night.

Lieut. John Vandall, retiring after serving 27 years as a lieutenant during 32 years on the force, was presented with a purse. Sergt. John J. Nugent, who served 31 years on the force, of which more than 20 years were in the capacity of sergeant, was presented with a gold tie pin and badge. The presentation talks were made by Magistrate Howard B. McNutt in the South Side Station.

WOMAN SLAIN DURING 'DATE,' YOUTH HELD

International News Service.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Aug. 2.—Love, for another girl, drove Robert Edwards, 23, of Edwardsville, a mine surveyor, to send his sweetheart of four years, Freda McKechnie, 26-year-old church worker, to her death in the waters of Harvey's Lake.

So police declared today in announcing that after hours of grilling the youthful suitor had made a statement of what occurred last Monday night when the girl, an expectant mother, met her death.

After four years of ardent courtship, police quoted Edwards as explaining, the love he had for Freda cooled. Meanwhile, he found a new love, a girl from upper New York state.

Monday night, the police said, Edwards made a "date" with Freda. They drove in his car to the banks of Harvey's Lake to discuss the situation.

GIRL FAINTED

The shock was too great for the girl. She fainted. While she was unconscious, Edwards admitted striking her on the head, according to police. Then, they quoted him as explaining, he dragged her body 200 feet away from the shore and left it.

Panic stricken, he returned to his parked automobile. Freda's clothes were in the car and Edwards was quoted by police as stating he threw them into a clump of bushes along the shore.

When found, Freda's body was clad in a bathing suit. A white bathing cap concealed the ugly gash at the back of her head.

Edwards was arrested a few hours after the girl's body was discovered Tuesday evening. Police said he gave several versions of what occurred that fateful night and that they discovered several discrepancies in his various stories.

HELD WITHOUT BAIL

He was held without bail at the Wyoming Barracks of the State Police pending arraignment, probably tomorrow, on a formal charge of murder.

An autopsy established the girl died of a severe concussion of the brain. No water was found in the lungs as would have been the case in a drowning.

In the Edwardsville High School class book of 1929 was found this significant reference to Edwards:

"Smiles for the ladies; never tears;

"Bobby's conquests will last for years."

Edwards had previously maintained he and Freda went swimming Monday night and that the girl suddenly sank in the lake and was drowned after diving from a raft.

Roomer In Hospital, Landlady Arrested

Charles Blatz, 48, a roomer at 6 Sharon street, was recovering today in the South Side Hospital of severe lacerations of the face, alleged to have been inflicted with a paper weight in the hands of his landlady, Mrs. Bertha Kimmel, 51.

Mrs. Kimmel was arrested and charged with aggravated assault and battery. She claimed Blatz came home drunk and started a fight, police said.

Elissa Giggles At Mother In Court

MISS ELSIE JANIS

Elsie Janis Tells About 'Headache' At Trial

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—The novel and poetry writing movie actress, Elissa Landi, giggled in court as her mother, Countess Zinardi Landi, testified as a defense witness in trial of the $11,000 suit brought against the actress by a theatrical agency seeking commissions.

Asked by Ralph Blum, the agency's lawyer, whether she had discussed the case with anyone before the trial, the Countess replied:

"Not any more than your clients have, Mr. Blum."

This greatly amused Miss Landi and she giggled along with other spectators.

Countess Landi said Harry Cohn, Columbia Pictures executive, warned her daughter not to let those "flesh peddlers queer the picture." This remark, said the Countess, was made in connection with negotiations for Miss Landi to appear in a Columbia picture.

Elsie Janis, the stage comedienne, told how she brought about a contract between Miss Landi and Cohn.

Asked if she received anything as negotiator, Miss Janis said:

"Nothing but a headache. I'm going to hold Elissa up for anything she has left after you all get through."

North Side Store Leads in Rum Sales

The first time since the opening of the state liquor stores, the Diamond street store, North Side, reported the largest receipts for one week it was announced today by the Liquor Control Board.

For the week ending July 21, the North Side store took in $11,840.23 as compared with $11,478.26 for the Boulevard of the Allies store. In Philadelphia, the Sansom street store reported receipts of $10,391.83 for the corresponding period. The Baum boulevard store was credited with $9,926.69.

FATHER PLANS TO VIEW BODY OF DILLINGER

Suit Now Looms Over Autopsy Removing Part of Brain

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—John Dillinger, Sr., today sought and obtained permission to disinter the body of his son, "Wooden Gun John."

Accompanied by his attorney, Samuel J. Mantell, the 70-year-old father of the slain desperado went to the State Board of Health and filled out forms necessary for exhumation of the body which was buried last week in Crown Hill Cemetery here.

He gave no reason for wanting to disinter the body and later between his stage appearances at a local theater he declined to discuss the matter. He would only say the action was taken following communication with some persons in Chicago. He refused to name these persons.

FATHER UNDECIDED

The father said:

"I have the permit, but I haven't decided yet whether to use it."

The application to exhume the body came shortly after Frank J. Walsh, coroner at Chicago, had revealed that scientists under his direction were studying parts of the brain and vital organs of the bandit.

The coroner said an ounce or two of the criminal's brain and parts of his lungs, heart and kidneys had been removed soon after he had been shot and killed at Chicago. The coroner added that pathologists were examining the organs to determine whether Dillinger's anti-social tendencies might be attributed to abnormality or disease.

$20,000 SUIT LOOMS

The Indianapolis Star said the elder Dillinger was heard to remark to a stage doorkeeper at the theater:

"They tell me that Cook County is liable for $20,000."

Another member of the family, Emmett Hancock, asked if suit was planned against the Cook County officials, said:

"We don't know."

During his stage appearance the father said:

"There isn't enough money in the world to get me to place my boy's body on exhibition."

Shortly after Dillinger's body was brought to his home town of Mooresville, Ind., to be prepared for burial, the father revealed he had received an offer of $10,000 from two promoters who desired to place the body on exhibition.

The father rejected this offer, saying:

"I don't like things like that."

WOODEN GUN HIDDEN

The wooden gun that Dillinger used to force his way out of jail at Crown Point, Ind., last March 3, is being kept in a vault here.

Emmett Hancock, brother-in-law of the gangster, revealed today that it had been delivered to him a few days after the bandit's escape from what had been declared to be one of the most modern jails in the country.

An unidentified man brought him the imitation firearm, according to Hancock, who is appearing with the elder Dillinger, and two other members of the family in a motion picture theatre here.

Dillinger, a former tool maker, did a good job on the wooden gun, Hancock said. He declined to show the gun. The only photograph that will be taken of it, he said, will be reproduced in a book John Dillinger, Sr., is writing of his son's life.

BRAIN NOT REMOVED

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—A denial that the entire brain of John Dillinger, slain gangster, had been removed was made by Coroner Frank J. Walsh here.

The Coroner said an ounce of the brain and small parts of the outlaw's vital organs had been taken from the body during an autopsy and sent to the Morgue laboratory, for miscroscopic examination in an effort to determine if Dillinger's anti-social impulses had their genesis in some abnormality or disease.

have enough for myself in the bank out of my allowance."

NOT LIKE DILLINGER

A suggestion that gangster movies may have given him the idea, he brushed away impatiently with:

"No—I don't like that sort of movie."

What kind of books and magazines did he read?

"I read good books—Edgar Rice Burroughs and things like that . . . I always read the American Boy Magazine."

If he didn't read gangster stories, perhaps he wanted to be like John Dillinger . . .

"Like him—I should say not."

He was emphatic in his denial of the Dillinger influence, adding this disdainful comeback:

"If I wanted to be like him, would I be here now?"

PAL 'RUNS OUT'

Gruber, the trigger-man, according to authorities, folded his arms across his chest and looked belligerently at his inquisitors. He refused to make any statement and declined to sign a confession as authorities say his companion had done. He said:

"Sure, I'll answer your questions—you can't prove anything on me with that, but I'll not sign anything. Not until I see a lawyer, anyway."

He referred to his partner in crime, young Ischan, as "My Pal" with a significant movement of forefinger across his throat.

He didn't like the way his companion "ran out" on him after the shooting, police say he told them, and "left him holding the bag."

COMPANION FLEES

It was Gruber, police say, who on a signal from Tschan as he walked along a lonely country lane near East Canton beside Schwarz, sent a bullet crashing into the back of the gold trader without a word of warning. It was Gruber also, police declare, who battled with the wounded Schwarz and shot him again in the head as they struggled for possession of the gun on the C. F. Lawson farm while Tschan, who planned the holdup, according to authorities, ran as fast as his legs could carry him back to Massillon.

Gruber, police say, told them he and young Tschan embarked on their career of crime with the robbery of Tschan's grandfather when they ransacked the well-to-do grocer's room in Massillon three weeks ago.

This was a few days before they met Schwarz, according to police, at Gruber's home. A few articles of old gold and some gold coins, police say the boys told them, were sold to Schwarz.

ACTED AS LOOKOUT

Gruber, Assistant Prosecutor Barthelmeh says he told him, acted as lookout while young Tschan did the actual looting. It was on this occasion, according to Barthelmeh, that the boys obtained the ancient revolver used in the holdup and killing of Schwarz.

Gruber, according to authorities, was quick to admit his part in everything, even to the actual shooting. He nodded his head wisely as he remarked:

"You can't use it against me remember, it's your word gainst mine you know."

Did he intend to kill the gold trader, or was that an accident?

His answer to this, according to police, was for a moment, a bit evasive. He told them, police say, he planned to shoot to attract his attention and then hold him up because he thought he had a gun; then, according to authorities, he blurted out:

"Well, we just planned to lay him out and I guess I changed my mind about shooting past him and let him have it."

BOYS FACE TO FACE

Faced with his companion for the first time since their capture last night in the Stark County Jail, Gruber turned on Tschan in a veritable barrage of questions:

"Where did you go after the shot was fired?"

Tschan, stammering, replied:

"Well . . . that shot came so close to me . . . I just ran down the hill . . ."

"You're a fine pardner . . . you ran home, didn't you?"

There was no other show of animosity between the boys, however. They posed with each other for newspaper pictures; they joked together, and once they had to be warned by their deputy sheriff guard to refrain from whispering to each other.

SOLD GOLD

Assistant Prosecutor Barthelmeh said the boys told him they were encouraged to get old gold by Schwarz, who promised them a percentage of whatever he was willing to pay for it. The only gold they actually got for the Dormont gold trader, however, was the loot they obtained from the robbery of Tschan's grandfather. They each received $8 as their share of this accomplishment to Barthelmeh.

When he was shot down, Schwarz had on his person $267 in currency and about $40 worth of old gold, according to the authorities.

Lindy Forced From Sky By Fog

COL. LINDBERGH

Tuesday, but except for the principals, no one knew of it until today.

David W. Douglas, owner of the field, said today Lindbergh, en route to New Jersey in a borrowed plane, landed on the field after Douglas' hired man had driven off the cows browsing there.

Espying the emergency field, on which a larger plane also was driven down, Lindbergh started to descend when he saw the cattle. He circled while Douglas and the hired man drove the cattle away.

Col. Lindbergh then borrowed an automobile and continued his journey by motor. Douglas erected a barbed wire barrier about the plane to bar the cattle from it.

FAMILY MOURNS SLAIN FATHER

Tragedy today shrouded a Dormont home in which four children await the return of their father, not knowing that he lies dead in Canton, O.

Less than 12 hours after he kissed his children goodby Tuesday afternoon, Ernest Schwarz, 34, of 1770 Potomac avenue, fell into the dust of a country lane in Ohio, blood flowing from two bullet wounds in his body.

He died several hours later in a Canton hospital, after accusing two 15-year-old boys of shooting him following an attempted robbery.

Informed of the tragedy by a telephone call from the hospital where her husband lay dying, Mrs. Schwarz set out for Canton yesterday with an aunt and uncle.

She had been quietly observing her thirty-second birthday in her home at the time her husband was shot.

CAMP PROWLER SLAYS CHILD

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Ten-year-old Bernice Hoffman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Hoffman, of Beaumont, Tex., was shot and fatally wounded at a tourist camp near here early today by an unidentified prowler who attempted to enter the cabin occupied by the Hoffmans.

The little girl was shot as she lay asleep on a cot near the bed occupied by her parents and a younger sister and brother.

The shooting occurred during an attempted robbery of the Hoffmans. A man occupying an adjoining cabin said he was awakened by voices and heard some one standing between the cabins command Hoffman to hand over his trousers. The robber apparently found no money in the trousers and ordered Hoffman to hand him another pair hanging nearby. A shot then was fired. The bullet struck the sleeping child.

CHIEF CLEARED IN KILLING

Patton Township's Fire Chief Leonard Christoforo, 34, has been exonerated by a Coroner's jury at an inquest into the killing of his brother-in-law, Fred Morcco, Patton Township.

The jury yesterday brought in a verdict of excusable homicide after hearing the testimony of Mrs. Morcco, widow of the slain man and sister of Christoforo, of how the pair fought in an alley near their Broad street home. It was testified that Christoforo fired four shots into his brother-in-law after the brother-in-law attacked him with a knife.

MELLON SAILS FOR ENGLAND

Andrew W. Mellon, Pittsburgh banker and former Secretary of the Treasury, sailed last night for England on the Berengaria.

On the same boat is J. P. Morgan, international financier.

Attaches in Pittsburgh today said it was "just a coincidence" that the two leading financiers were shipmates. Mr. Mellon is just taking a brief ocean trip and may see his daughter, Mrs. Ailsa Bruce, who is in Scotland, it was understood.

MAIL DIVORCES HELD INVALID

MEXICO, D. F., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Every Mexican 'mail order' divorce granted to Americans in the last few years probably would be declared illegal if appealed to the federal district courts, the American consulate general here has stated after a thorough legal study of recent higher court decisions.

These decisions clearly set forth as a principle of Mexican law that residence of both parties in Mexico at the time the divorce is granted is necessary to make the action legal.

No single decision nullifying divorces by the wholesale has been made nor is one possible under Mexican law, but the recent rulings open the way for individual appeals by thousands of Americans who were divorced in their absence.

The investigation by American authorities cooperating with Mexican officials has resulted in the closing of several "mail order" divorce rings which defraud many American citizens. It has slowed down the divorce business generally.

CHILD DRUNK, FATHER JAILED

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—A case of drunkenness which involved a three-year-old boy, found wobbling unsteadily along the street, today drew from a police court judge one of the longest sentences on record here growing out of a simple charge of intoxication.

Judge Ralph Given sentenced Bernard Manyette, 33, to six months in jail after it was testified he had given whisky to his young son, Paul. Manyette denied the charge.

SUIT REVIVES GIRL MYSTERY

WAYNESBURG, Pa., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Interest in the seven-year-old mystery of the disappearance of Norma Sabo, 15, from Carmichaels has been revived in Greene County with the filing of a court petition by her father, Mike Sabo, of Crucible, to have her declared legally dead.

The father seeks to collect $265 on an insurance policy on the girl's life. Hearing was set for September 17.

The girl left her parents' home at Crucible about July 1, 1927, to become a domestic servant in a Carmichaels dwelling, about five miles distant. Six days later she disappeared and has never been heard from.

Marshal Lyautey Buried Among Dukes

NANCY, France, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Marshal Louis H. Lyautey, fourth French war marshal to die, was taken on a gun carriage today to a tomb among the 24 Dukes of Lorraine who also served France as soldiers, statesmen and colonizers since 1482. He died last Friday at 80.

Just about this time word came of the death of President Paul von Hindenburg, Germany's World War marshal against whom Lyautey sent scores of thousands of colonial troops.

Flying Boat Brings U. S. 8 Records

Universal Service.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 2.—Completing a 1,244-mile test flight, the giant Sikorsky flying boat S-42, the largest in the country, today had brought eight world's records formerly held in foreign countries home to the United States.

THE BIG S-42

The craft carried a 4,409-pound payload, and was manned by a special crew of six, including Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. For four laps around a special course encircling Long Island, the 19-ton boat averaged close to 160 miles an hour. All the new records set were for a 622-mile, two-lap course.

The marks eclipsed were for speed over a 622-mile course with no load, and with a 1,100-pound load, 138 miles an hour, held in Germany; with a 2,200-pound payload, held in France; with a 4,400-pound load, another German mark; with no payload over a 1,244-mile course, held by France; with a 1,100-pound payload over a 1,244-mile course, held by France; with a 2,200-pound payload and a 4,400-pound payload over the same distance, both formerly held by France.

The United States now holds virtually all important transportation records for marine airplanes.

MEAT PRICE CUT IN STORE WAR

For dinner tonight Homewood wives probably will surprise their husbands with a variety of meats.

The reason is a price war which, brewing for three weeks, reached a climax today. Four stores in North Homewood avenue were trying to outdo each other in offering bargains.

Steaks were down to 10 cents a pound. Veal chops were as cheap as your daily paper (but the butchers can't give you Winchell).

Lamb stew also was 3 cents a pound and beef liver was 9 cents.

RICH ECCENTRIC WILLS ESTATE OF MILLION

Bachelor Soled Own Shoes, Always Rode On Street Cars

He soled his own shoes, he cooked his own breakfast and he rode the street cars.

But he didn't have to do these things, for his will, filed for probate today, showed that he left behind him more than one million dollars.

Carl Banning spent many of his 72 years in Pittsburgh. He was born in Germany.

He was cautious and frugal. His only extravagances—if you can call them that—were the theater, books and a good dinner.

DINED WITH FRIENDS

He had perhaps a dozen, or less, friends in Pittsburgh. Each night in the week he would dine with a different one.

He made most of his money in the market, investing with a careful shrewdness.

A year ago he moved from his humble room to the Keystone Hotel downtown. There last week he died.

His body is being sent back to Germany, where, in the little town of Lengerich, he was the idol of the children. For each year at Christmas this pleasant old man would mail a check for $1,000 to the burgomaster for a party to the children. His reward for this each year were hundreds of letters to the bachelor—addressed to "Uncle Banning."

REMEMBERS GERMANS

To those friends and relatives back in Germany he left most of his estate.

But he remembered his Pittsburgh friends, for these bequests appear in his will:

Two and one-half per cent to C. V. Witt, of Millvale avenue.

Banning was said to be a heavy shareholder in Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.

He died last Thursday in his hotel room. One of his last requests was that he be buried alongside his parents in Lengerich, Germany.

Here are other bequests in the will:

$25,000 GIFTS

To each of these he gives $25,000: His father, Frederick Banning; his half-sister, Laura Banning; a half-brother, Rudolph Banning; a half-brother, Friedrich Banning.

Each servant in his employ at the time of death, $250, and $250 for each year.

The residue he divided:

Seven and one-half per cent to a brother, Christian Banning, of Hannover, Germany.

Fifteen per cent to Hans Berckemeyer, of Dortmund, Germany.

COUSINS SHARE

Seven and one-half per cent each to a cousin, Margarethe Terberger, of Westphalia; Marie Banning, a cousin, of Hagen, Westphalia.

Five per cent to a cousin, Paula Caspary, of Wilmersdorf, Germany.

Five per cent to each of these: Marie Nierhoff, of Bielefeld, Westphalia; Ann Hunke, a cousin, of Coln-on-the-Rhine; Agnes Benckel, of Marburg, Germany; Dr. Hans Donalies, of Berlin, Germany; Dr. Striepecke, of Berlin; Martin Berkemeyer, a cousin, of Muelheim-Ruhr, Germany; Hans Berkemeyer, a cousin, of Lankwitz, Germany, and Landgerichtsrat Schirmer, of Berlin, Germany.

In a codicil to the will, Banning struck out bequests to the employes of Banning, Cooper & Co., Ltd., a 10 per cent bequest to S. C. Cooper and a 5 per cent bequest to William Wieman.

SCHWAB 'MUCH IMPROVED'

CHARLES M. SCHWAB

LORETTO, Pa., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Charles M. Schwab, 72, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, is recovering today from an attack of indigestion, which forced him to go to bed.

Dr. D. S. Rice, of Ebensburg, said:

"Schwab was a pretty sick man, but he's been gradually improving. He looks all right; has a normal pulse, normal respiration and normal temperature."

Air Liner Reaches Coast, Sets Record

GLENDALE, Cal., Aug. 2.—(INS.)—Completing the first east-west overnight coast to coast passenger airplane flight, the huge Transcontinental and Western Air twin motored monoplane which left Newark, N. J., late yesterday, arrived today at 7:13 a. m., its elapsed time of 17 hours 45 minutes establishing a new record.

DOOMED WOMAN SCORES

MRS. ANNA ANTONIO

ELIZABETHTOWN, N. Y., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Supreme Court Justice Brewster today ordered the Albany County District Attorney to show cause next Monday why Mrs. Anna Antonio, sentenced to die August 9, should not be given a new trial.

Mrs. Antonio and two alleged accomplices already have received three reprieves.

The newly discovered evidence, is of a corroborative nature, appeared at the trial that on the morning Antonio was brought to the Memorial Hospital from Albany, after being found dying on a highway, Mrs. Antonio telephoned to learn if he was there.

The woman claimed she had been advised by some unknown person in a telephone message that Antonio had been injured in an automobile accident. She said the voice was not that of either of the alleged accomplices.

It now develops, according to her attorney's application, that a priest named Brown, who was at the hospital, telephoned the woman after he had returned to his rectory.

GIRLS SITTING ON WALL HIT BY AUTO

Injured when an automobile crashed into a stone wall upon which they were sitting, Marie Garrity, 8, of 156 Sawmill Run boulevard, and Patricia Devine, 8, 149 Sawmill Run boulevard, today were recovering in the St. Joseph Hospital.

The accident occurred yesterday near their homes as the girls were debating what candy to purchase at a nearby store. Marie's grandmother, Mrs. Elizabeth Brennan, had given each two cents.

Police arrested Alfonse Cancilla, 50, 612 Beltzhoover avenue, charging reckless driving and operating a car without a driver's license. The accident occurred, according to police, as two other children stepped into the road and Cancilla swerved the machine to avoid hitting them.

Two passengers in Cancilla's car were Miss Rose Marie Torley, 18, of Michigan avenue, who suffered a fractured wrist, and William Richter, 18, 513 Sylvania avenue, who, with Cancilla, suffered bruises.

Albert D. Stropie, 53, a broom salesman of 711 Arch street, North Side, is facing a reckless driving charge. Stropie, according to police, due to deafness did not hear the siren on a fire engine when it swerved from Sandusky street into East Ohio street last night, and crashed into it.

Mrs. Elizabeth Jennings, 48, of 203 Hazel lane, Edgeworth, is in the Allegheny General Hospital in a serious condition from injuries suffered in an automobile collision late last night at Galveston avenue and Manchester boulevard, North Side. She suffered a probable skull fracture, concussion of the brain and a cut hand. Both drivers, Robert G. Jennings, husband of the injured woman, and Thomas J. O'Toole, 34, 1004 Locust street, were charged with reckless driving. O'Toole also was held under $1,000 bond to await the outcome of Mrs. Jennings' injuries.

Yearick Quits as Head Of Hospital Here

Henry G. Yearick, for 11 years superintendent of Homeopathic Hospital, has resigned effective October 1 and his post will be taken by Maj. N. J. Sepp, assistant superintendent of West Penn Hospital, it became known today.

Major Sepp

Mr. Yearick

Yearick came here in 1922 from Akron. Nine of his 24 years in the hospital field were spent in Spokane, Wash. He took the superintendency of the Homeopathic Hospital prior to its building expansion and was responsible for installing a modern records and inventory stores system.

Maj. Sepp, an officer in the Twenty-eighth Division during the World War, has been connected with West Penn Hospital since his return from overseas. He is a reserve officer in the National Guard and is now at Camp Muir. He will return to the city August 13 and will assume his new duties September 1.

Founded in 1866, the Homeopathic Hospital is one of the oldest in the city. Through four depression years it has maintained service to the poor of its district without much curtailment, Yearick pointed out. It has managed to discount all bills and maintain a cash balance of more than $25,000 in bank. Its experiences has been in marked contrast with that of other hospitals which have been forced to curtail free care.

Yearick's plans are indefinite. His wife and daughter are in Madison, Wis., where his daughter is taking post-graduate work at the University of Wisconsin. He plans to drop active connection with the institution September 1 and to attend the American Hospital Association convention in Philadelphia in September before making any decision.

As assistant superintendent of the West Penn, one of the two largest hospitals in this part of the state, Maj. Sepp has borne a considerable part of the burden of meeting hospital needs during the past years of economic disturbance. He is married and has one daughter, Virginia, who will be graduated next year from the University of Pittsburgh.

PROBE RENTALS AT RAIL PAY HEARING

Explanation of payments of millions in "rentals" and "improvements" to lesser companies by the Pittsburgh Railways Company was sought today by Dr. J. W. Madden, impartial chairman of a special arbitration board, conducting hearings on a new wage contract for the motormen.

Following disclosure that $7,000,000 was paid to these companies in the last 10 years for "improvements and betterments," Madden today asked C. D. Palmer, of the railways company research department," who eventually gets the money paid to these companies as rentals."

C. S. Mitchell, railways controller and vice president of the Philadelphia Company, yesterday had testified that the $7,000,000 for "improvements" had been paid these companies since 1924, in addition to rent payments of $2,500,000 annually.

He also admitted that the railways company did not deduct any portion from the yearly rentals for these improvements, and that there were "prior liens" ahead of these claims for "improvements."

EXPLAINS RENTALS

Palmer explained that the money paid as "rentals" finally went to the bondholders of the lessor companies.

Madden indicated that it seemed the rentals were very high when the railways company also paid for improvements on these leased lines.

Palmer explained that the rentals were for use of property held under long term franchises by other parties for which the company had to pay.

He added that the "improvements" were really necessary to keep the lines in running condition.

QUESTION OF TIME

Mitchell yesterday declared that unless the revenues of the railways company were increased it would be only "a question of time" until trolley service in the city "ceases as a unified system."

O. David Zimring, counsel for the trolley men's union, fighting for a higher wage for the men, asked Mitchell:

"Do the corporate records, listing $99,000,000 in capital and liabilities, show a fair picture of the worth of the Pittsburgh Railways?"

WOULDN'T INVEST

Mitchell answered that he "didn't know."

Persisting in his questioning, Zimring asked if Mitchell would consider the entire company a "good buy" considering the earnings of the company, the book-figure capital structure and the future.

Mitchell replied:

"I wouldn't invest my money in it, because it never could or will be able to pay a return on the $99,000,000 valuation."

Under questioning by Carl E. Glock, attorney for the traction company, Mitchell stated, however, that "depreciation" was not figured on the basis of the $99,000,000 valuation, but of $62,500,000.

He also declared that the Philadelphia Company had "written off" loans of $25,000,000 made to the Pittsburgh Railways.

Relatives Claim Body at Mayview

John Bauer, 70, who died in the city hospital at Mayview and whose body was erroneously reported as having been unclaimed, has been buried by his relatives, it was learned today.

The body was turned over to relatives immediately after death and was not left unclaimed as was previously reported.

'GRAND OLD MAN' TWICE QUIT RETIREMENT TO SAVE FATHERLAND

Paul von Hindenburg, to Germans "Der Alte" or "grand old man," was to the rest of the world a rock-like bulwark of German union and a force for stability when the post-war republic tottered on the brink of civil war.

Emerging from retirement after a military career that spanned more than an ordinary life time and included two of the great wars of history, he undertook the duties of president of the Reich when he was nearing the age of 78, served his full term of seven years and then won re-election in 1932.

Greeted first as a forerunner of restoration of the monarchy, he proved a staunch constitutionalist, did his utmost to preserve a parliamentary government and accepted the virtual dictatorship of Adolf Hitler in 1933 only when the German people voted for centralization of power.

PAUL VON HINDENBURG
Marshal von Hindenburg pictured in 1925—as he assumed the German presidency.

BURDENED BY DEBT

Germany, burdened by World War reparations, groaning under an increasingly heavy load of taxation and then sorely stricken by the world-wide economic crisis of 1929-33, swerved several times toward chaos. But the iron-willed octogenarian who held the presidency, applied the discipline, adaptability and fatherly responsibility that had made him beloved by the nation in World War days and, his contemporaries testified, did more than any other one individual to hold together the nation of 63,000,000.

The 12 months beginning with February, 1931, were especially critical. At the start it was proposed to make von Hindenburg president for life, but the aged executive put it aside. Contending political factions kept the country in a ferment and at one stage von Hindenburg was ready to resign. Bruening, Catholic Centrist, was chancellor and in October the president demanded that he reorganize the government on Rightist lines. Von Hindenburg had his first talk with Hitler at this time and learned that the National Socialist leader wanted full power or nothing.

PLEADS FOR PEACE

Von Hindenburg opened 1932 with a New Year's appeal for disarmament and world peace. He urged his countrymen to settle their domestic differences, but on February 15, when he announced his willingness to run for another term, he said he was undertaking the task in order to avert civil war.

He had three opponents in the election, Hitler as candidate of the National Socialists, Theodore Duesterberg, representing the Nationalists, and Ernst Thaelmann, Communist. Von Hindenburg led the field in the first balloting, failing to gain a majority by less than a half of 1 per cent. In the run-off on April 10, he defeated Hitler by nearly 6,000,000 votes.

On May 30 Von Hindenburg forced resignation of Bruening's cabinet and named Franz von Papen chancellor. Recurring national parliamentary elections showed Hitlerism gaining steadily, but in August von Hindenburg refused to give the chancellorship to the Nazi leader and the latter declined a post as vice chancellor.

Von Papen gave way in November to Kurt von Schleicher, who instituted a rigid regime, but in the following February he asked the President to dissolve the Reichstag and met so stern a refusal that he resigned. Two days later Hitler was named, but with von Papen as vice chancellor.

CLINGS TO POST

Within the next five months the Reichstag passed under control of the Nazis, gave Hitler dictatorial powers and dissolved itself, state governments were superseded by federal administrations, anti-Nazi mayors were ousted, opposing parties dissolved and thousands of political opponents of the regime were interned in prison camps. Socialism and Communism were outlawed and such restrictions placed upon Jews that world-wide protests resulted.

It was a complete political revolution and von Hindenburg went along with it, but only as his position as executive head of the state demanded. To the people he still was the symbol of German national destiny that he had been in World War days.

He had been present as a young officer of Prussia when Bismarck proclaimed the German empire at Versailles in 1871. He had gone steadily ahead in the old imperial army and reached the age of retirement when he was called from his life of ease at Hanover to stem the Russian invasion of East Prussia in 1914.

DOMINATING FIGURE

Emerging from retirement at the age of 67, Paul von Hindenburg, in the years that followed, became one of the most conspicuous figures in the military and civic history of Germany.

He had earned his retirement by long and notable service, which included two wars, in the army of the former German empire. His greatest work in behalf of the Fatherland, however, was still to be performed.

Called from his life of ease at Hanover, von Hindenburg was assigned to stem the Russian invasion of East Prussia in 1914. Jokingly he wrote his wife on the eve of the battle of Tannenberg:

"I believe your old man is going to become famous after all."

It was that battle that gained him the title: "Savior of the Fatherland," a field marshal's baton and as many honors as a grateful country could bestow.

DEFIES OLD AGE

From that time on von Hindenburg continued to be a living refutation of the fallacy that "a man is too old at 40."

He rose to the supreme command of the German armies during the World War and with the conclusion of hostilities once more, apparently with his life's work ended, sought the seclusion to which he felt he was entitled.

Six years later another emergency threatened the future of Germany, which in the meantime had become a republic. The death of Friederich Ebert, first President of the Republic, caused grave concern among the proponents of that form of government. They, as well as the Conservatives, received with consternation the announcement that von Hindenburg had consented to run for President.

The old warrior, upon taking office and in a short time thereafter, not only convinced the skeptical that their fears were groundless, but proved a disappointment to the Monarchists and die-hards.

As President von Hindenburg he was a type of man who appealed to patriotic Germans by reason of their belief that he embodied all the stern Germanic virtues—virile strength combined with an unswerving devotion to duty and great singleness of purpose. It was said of him that not since the days of Bismarck, the Iron Chancellor, had there been in German public life a personality so popular, respected and dominating.

SON OF SOLDIER

Paul Ludwig Hans Anton von Beneckendorf und von Hindenberg was born at Posen, formerly in Prussia, now Poznan in Poland, October 2, 1847, the son of a Prussian army officer and of a family most of whose sons had for over 300 years adopted a military career.

Young Paul went to the army as a matter of course, and when at 32 he received his commission as a captain on the general staff, he married Gertrud von Sperling, a girl of 18. The union was a happy one, the youthful bride becoming an ideal officer's wife. She died in 1921. A son, Oscar, and two daughters, Irmengard and Annemarie, were born to them. Oscar also entered the army, and both daughters married officers. President von Hindenburg was a grandfather many times over.

In addition to the national honors that were conferred upon him for his great victory at Tannenberg in the World War, von Hindenburg received honorary degrees from nine German universities and was made a freeman of as many university towns.

RUSSIANS BEATEN

Tannenberg was followed a week later by the battle of the Mazurian Lakes, which definitely disposed of the Russian menace to Germany's eastern border. Then by a series of skillful moves, he defeated the Russians again at Lodz, Poland.

German hopes rose high when, in 1916, placed in supreme command of the German armies, he turned his attention to the western front, where he was to meet his master. His name was given to the famous "Hindenburg line," a system of communicating trenches and concrete fortifications which long withstood assaults by the allied armies. But the American support of the Allied offensive after four years of attrition made resistance hopeless.

On October 3, 1918, von Hindenburg was called to Berlin and attended the council at which Prince Maximilian, of Baden, was made chancellor. There the victor of Tannenberg presented the facts that resulted in the armistice proposal to the Allies by Germany, and it was he who conducted the difficult task of withdrawing the dispirited German forces back home.

FRICTION HINTED

There has been much gossip about personal friction between von Hindenburg and the ex-kaiser. A kinsman, Herbert von Hindenburg, in an article, admitted that there was little love lost between the former war lord and the people's idol.

The old field marshal spoke his mind in plain language which did not always please the "all highest," but he never shirked responsibility. An example of this was his dispatch to President Ebert:

"The signing of the Peace Treaty gives me occasion for declaring that I was responsible for the decisions and acts of Great Headquarters since August 29, 1916, and also that all proclamations and orders of his Majesty, the Emperor and King, concerning the waging of warfare, were issued upon my advice and upon my responsibility. I beg you, therefore, to inform the German people and the Allied governments of this declaration."

RETIRED AT 72

Von Hindenburg resigned command of the German army in June, 1919, and once more retired, at 72. No one, least of all himself, had the faintest notion that he would ever be called upon to succeed Ebert, "the saddler president," who died in February, 1925.

After the parties of the Right had been convinced by the primary election returns in March, 1925, that their candidate, Lord Mayor Jarres of Duisburg, could not win in the finals, Admiral Alfred von Tirpitz insisted that the only man in Germany who could defeat Wilhelm Marx, the candidate of Centrists, Socialists and Democrats, was "der Alte" — the Grand Old Man of Germany. Von Tirpitz was commissioned to look him up at Hanover.

PLEDGE TO NATION

A week before the election, the first popular balloting for president under the republican constitution, the aged field marshal received the representatives of the German and foreign press at Hanover. They saw a vigorous, impressive personality, who made it plain that it was only from a sense of duty to his Fatherland that he abandoned the quiet of his home, and that he hoped that this example of devotion to duty might contribute to the unification of a Germany sadly torn by factional strife.

As to the charge of warlike intentions, he told the newspapermen in a touching, fatherly tone of the horrors he had witnessed during the World War, and how, at the end of an eventful life, there was no thought further removed from him than that of sanctioning or preparing for a new war.

SECOND PRESIDENT

On April 26, 1925, at the election, 14,639,399 Germans cast their votes for Hindenburg, who thus became the second president.

Two surprises were sprung before he was inaugurated. He requested Secretary of State Dr. Otto Meissner, under Ebert, to remain, and authorized the then Chancellor Luther to proclaim his solidarity with the cabinet's adherence to the Dawes plan and its program of international reconciliation which later culminated in the Locarno agreements.

On May 12, 1925, von Hindenburg was inaugurated, and with a loud, unhesitating voice he swore allegiance to the republican constitution. Everybody, friend and foe alike of the new order, knew from the character of the new president and from his religious regard for the sanctity of the oath, that his office would be administered strictly according to the constitution.

AIDS NEW ORDER

Von Hindenburg, then 78 years old, spared no effort or energy to accustom himself to the tasks of his new office. With clock-like regularity, the chief of the government's press division had to report to him every day on world events as reflected in the daily press. An hour later, ministers, chiefs of departments, specialists on various public questions were requested to report.

To increase the respect for the exalted office of chief executive, President von Hindenburg soon set out upon a number of "swings around the circle," visiting one province after another, meeting officials, greeting the masses, and everywhere preaching the message of unity. "Forget your party strife, let us all pull together for a united fatherland" was the burden of practically every address.

SETTLES SQUABBLES

Only seldom did the president assume an active political role. When he did, however, there was no mincing of words. Thus, when after the fall of the second Luther cabinet in 1926 the party leaders for weeks squabbled about the composition of the next cabinet, von Hindenburg called them to his office one day and, according to all reports, "talked to them like a Dutch uncle"—and several days later the second Marx cabinet presented itself to the Reichstag.

Again, when in October, 1926, the fact leaked out that Ex-Crown Prince Frederick William's oldest son had taken part in the maneuvers of the Reichswehr, the president did not hesitate to accept the resignation of the chief of the army, Gen. Hans von Seeckt, as the man responsible in the last analysis for this blunder.

On some occasions, Hindenburg's official utterances had an international repercussion; when he gave his benison to the treaty of Locarno when he approved of Germany's admission to the League of Nations and when he emphatically repudiated the accusations that Germany had been the cause of the World War.

TIRELESS WORKER

The German president was an indefatigible worker, and his daily time table at the presidential residence in the Wilhelmstrasse was adhered to with military punctuality. His favorite recreation was the chase. Every summer he spent a month hunting in the highlands of Dietramszell, Bavaria.

"A shining example of unselfish devotion to the public weal" was a phrase from an address by Chancellor Marx speaking in the name of the German nation on the occasion of von Hindenburg's eightieth birthday, October 2, 1927, which was celebrated throughout the Reich in a manner that left no doubt as to the deep veneration in which the whole country held him. Probably no German ever received such an overwhelming tribute to his popularity as did President von Hindenburg on that occasion. Ten million marks were voluntarily subscribed by Germans to establish a "Hindenburg Fund" which the aged celebrant dedicated to the assistance of needy war victims.

CLAIMED BY MASSES

As he continued in the presidency, the very men who helped put von Hindenburg in that office disassociated themselves from him, while the great masses of the people as well as the Republican parties claimed him as their own. That turn of events resulted because the Nationalists who promoted his candidacy had regarded von Hindenburg merely as a chair warmer for the monarchy.

The conflict between the President and his former political friends became an irreconcilable one in 1929, when Nationalists started the plebiscite demand in an attempt to defeat the Young plan of reparations. What particularly irritated the aged President was that the plebiscite proposal was aimed chiefly at the policies of the late foreign minister, Gustav Stresemann, who died only a few weeks before the vote on the plebiscite.

Von Hindenburg had supported the foreign minister's policies and had taken a great fancy to him. He let the nation know in no uncertain terms that he was against the plebiscite demand and showed his feeling for Stresemann by insisting upon walking behind the hearse at the foreign minister's funeral.

BEATEN BY APATHY

To defeat the Young plan the plebiscite bill needed a favorable vote of 21,000,000, but the general apathy to the poll was indicated by the less than 6,000,000 votes cast for it.

President von Hindenburg was a strict constitutionalist and in deciding upon that as his guiding principle in government, he took Emperor William I, founder of the German reich, as his model. He went even to the extent of speaking of the cabinet as "my ministers." That was not meant to indicate that they were mere tools or that he attempted to dictate to them, but since they were his appointees he intended to stand by them. As President he did not undertake a step without consulting the minister of the department involved.

U. S. WAR ENTRY LINKED TO HINDENBURG

By TOM WILHELM
International News Service Staff Correspondent

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—Gen. Paul von Hindenburg's acceptance of complete control of the German armies on August 29, 1916, after a little more than two years since he returned to service, was primarily responsible for America's entry into the World War.

Paradoxical as it may seem, this view may be defended, particularly by using the memoirs of Count von Bethmann Hollweg, Imperial German Chancellor at the time Hindenburg assumed command.

With Ludendorff as his General Quartermaster, Hindenburg detailed strategists and operations leaders to take care of Rumania while he attended to his job on the western front. Rumania was caught in the nutcracker maneuvers of the German and their allies.

Meanwhile Hindenburg has surveyed his position and decided it was untenable. He ordered construction of the vaunted Hindenburg line, which was later drenched with the flower of western allied blood.

Then came the celebrated fight between Admiral von Tirpitz and the chancellery.

U-BOAT SQUABBLE

The chancellor, von Bethmann Hollweg, fighting with his back to the wall to keep more nations from taking up arms against the already harassed Germany, counselled moderation in the "submarine warfare."

Little was known of the strength of America and less was cared. America, pooh, it will take them years before they are ready to fight (and it did). In the meantime England must be brought to her knees with submarines. This blockade must be broken.

HINDENBURG'S WIRE

That was the tenure of the general staff's orders to the chancellor according to his own writings.

During December, 1916, Hindenburg telegraphed Berlin:

"I intimated in my telegram the necessity of the soonest, most energetic handling of the submarine question, as I see in it the only way to bring about a speedy end to the war."

"Your excellencies hold you are unable to take this step. Our military situation does not permit any dabbling in rightly conceived military measures which will lame the war direction."

Hindenburg's sharp wire to the cabinet evidently closed the door on von Bethmann Hollweg, and January 9, 1917, at Pless, the die was cast in favor of unrestricted warfare.

Less than 90 days afterwards America declared war.

Von Bethmann Hollweg was forced out of the chancellory by the same means by the general staff. Hindenburg and Ludendorff sent the Kaiser word that they were resigning their posts because they could not work with the chancellor.

GERMANY MOURNS DEATH OF VON HINDENBURG, IDOL OF NATION

Freystadt, the passing of von Hindenburg meant more than the death of a President—it meant the departure of a close personal friend.

And that, here, meant more than any such questions as the ascendancy of Chancellor Adolf Hitler to new power.

Besides those who were at the deathbed the President is survived by 10 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Today the official flag of the Reich's President flies at half staff. It was run up to that position when the von Hindenburg family banner was lowered.

An infantry regiment of honor moved into the estate from Deutscheyman to pay proper military tribute.

BURIAL AT NEUDECK

His burial will be at Neudeck Saturday or Sunday.

Throughout the morning stern-faced guards and soldiers stood in front of the mansion. The Neudeck population, anxious to have a last look at their patron, were not allowed to leave their work to approach the house.

Strong measures were taken to preserve peace. Blackshirted members of the Schutz Staffel, the special Storm Troops, and secret police banned traffic from the street.

Five miles away, however, in Freystadt, things were more normal except for the mournful aspect of the populace and an attitude of tension as the day wore on.

The people there gathered in small knots on the corners. Shopowners stood in their doors and asked for further news on the last hours of the Field Marshal. Flags at half-staff flew from every house. Their staffs also were draped with black crepe.

CHURCH BELLS TOLL

Church bells tolled and, in the Freystadt church, where the Hindenburg family has a pew, the pastor placed flowers.

At the little church in Lingnau, where President von Hindenburg himself always attended services, a special funeral service will be conducted for the townsfolk.

High officials hurried by automobile through Freystadt. They went from hotel to hotel, reserving rooms for state officials and officers who will come here for the last rites. A little gray automobile was making continuous runs between Freystadt and Neudeck, delivering an incoming avalanche of mail.

The town crier marched through Freystadt, announcing from the street corners:

"On the occasion of the funeral of the Reichspresident a great number of visitors is expected. As all hotels already are overcrowded, the population is asked to put rooms at the disposal of the Burgomaster!"

Von Hindenburg's wife died in 1921 at Hanover, where she is buried. President von Hindenburg will probably be buried at Hanover or at Neudeck.

By a historic coincidence von Hindenburg surrendered to death 20 years to the day after Germany mobilized troops to enter the World War.

TWENTY YEARS AFTER

August 2, 1914, Germany began to arm, in an admission that peace was no longer possible. Von Hindenburg, then a retired general, received a telegram asking if he could be ready for service.

His reply consisted of only three words:

"I am ready."

In his hasty departure for service, says an oft-repeated anecdote, von Hindenburg, ever immaculate, was dismayed to find himself wearing a uniform whose pants and jacket did not match.

The death of the "Grand Old Man" came within two days of the twentieth anniversary of the famous speech by former Kaiser Wilhelm in which Germany declared war.

Speaking from the balcony of the royal palace to assembled thousands, the German emperor uttered these fateful words:

"I no longer know any parties; I know only Germany!"

Von Hindenburg was succeeded in death today by the man he opposed frequently in life—Hitler.

For several years, the history of Germany has been the story of the meteoric rise of the radical Nazi Adolf Hitler and the check on that rise by the conservative monarchist Marshal von Hindenburg.

Once von Hindenburg and Hitler were outright opponents in a race for the presidency. That was in 1932. Von Hindenburg, then 84 years old, consented to run for re-election. Almost at once, Hitler entered the lists against him as the National Socialist candidate.

But the German people were not ready to accept Hitler as their president. He ran a distant second to Germany's "Grand Old Man" in the first election.

On March 14, 1932 — the very day after the election, when preliminary returns showed Hitler 7,500,000 votes behind—he issued a fervent appeal to his followers "to resume the fight in the fiercest form."

HINDENBURG ASSAILED

That fight was carried into the run-off election April 10, 1932. But it was still in vain. Von Hindenburg rode back into the presidency on a plurality of nearly 6,000,000 votes over Hitler.

But still Hitler was not content. The next day he issued another statement:

"The National Socialists know not what rest is, and must not tarry until the goal of German liberation has been reached. Our work begins tomorrow."

That work carried the Nazis to a place of power, where the strength of their party placed Hitler in a position in August, 1932, to demand the chancellorship.

Here again Hitler and von Hindenburg bumped. To Hitler's demand for the governing authority—in other words the right to erect a distatorship President von Hindenburg posed a steadfast "No!"

YIELDS AT LAST

Hitler was offered the post of Vice Chancellor under Chancellor Franz von Papen. He turned it down. Cabinet posts were offered to some of Hitler's lieutenants. These, too, Hitler refused.

The Hitler drive went on. And at length President von Hindenburg acceded. On January 30, 1933, he appointed Hitler as Chancellor.

Since then, the story had been one of von Hindenburg, the check rein on Nazi policies, the "sturdy oak" which held firm against radicalism.

The "old man" grew weak; today he died. And in Berlin, Hitler assumed the presidency.

Von Hindenburg Death Peaceful

NEUDECK, Germany, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—President Paul von Hindenburg, after suffering for weeks, died peacefully and without pain.

As he entered his last sleep there was an expression of great contentment on his rugged face.

Shortly before he had lifted his hands in prayer, and in death they remained folded.

On a table beside his bed was a book of favorite quotations. The last, which was underscored, read:

"With one hand he held the sword, with the other he worked."

GRIM 'SILENCE' BY LUDENDORFF

International News Service.

TUTZING, Bavaria, Aug. 2.—A tragic, lonely figure, whose dynamic pesonality once made Germany's army the most feared military host in the World War heard the news today that Field Marshal von Hindenburg, his closest associate in that great conflict, was dead and heard it in almost utter silence.

Gen. Erich Ludendorff spoke brusquely over the telephone when told the news from Neudeck. He said:

"I have absolutely no comment to make."

The connection was broken off immediately.

The man who once had victory almost in his grasp when he broke the Allied front in March of 1918, retired to his villa here a few years ago in disgrace, forgotten by his own people and by the world, except when an infrequent press dispatch tells that he is delving into alchemy or has issued an angry political tirade to which no one pays and heed.

Hitler to Give Oration At Funeral Tomorrow

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—The new President of Germany, Adolf Hitler, is expected to deliver the oration at the funeral of the late President von Hindenburg tomorrow.

The prospects are that it will be adcast to the naton and the adcast to the nation and the President Hitler, in a telegram condolence to Col. Oskar von Hindenburg, stated today:

"News of the President's death reached me while still deeply moved by the minute which will remain indelibly impressed upon me throughout my life—the minute I was privileged once more to see and speak to our field marshal and general."

The funeral services will be held at Tannenburg, where, as field marshal, von Hindenburg stopped the Russian drive into Germany. He is to be buried at his beloved Neudeck.

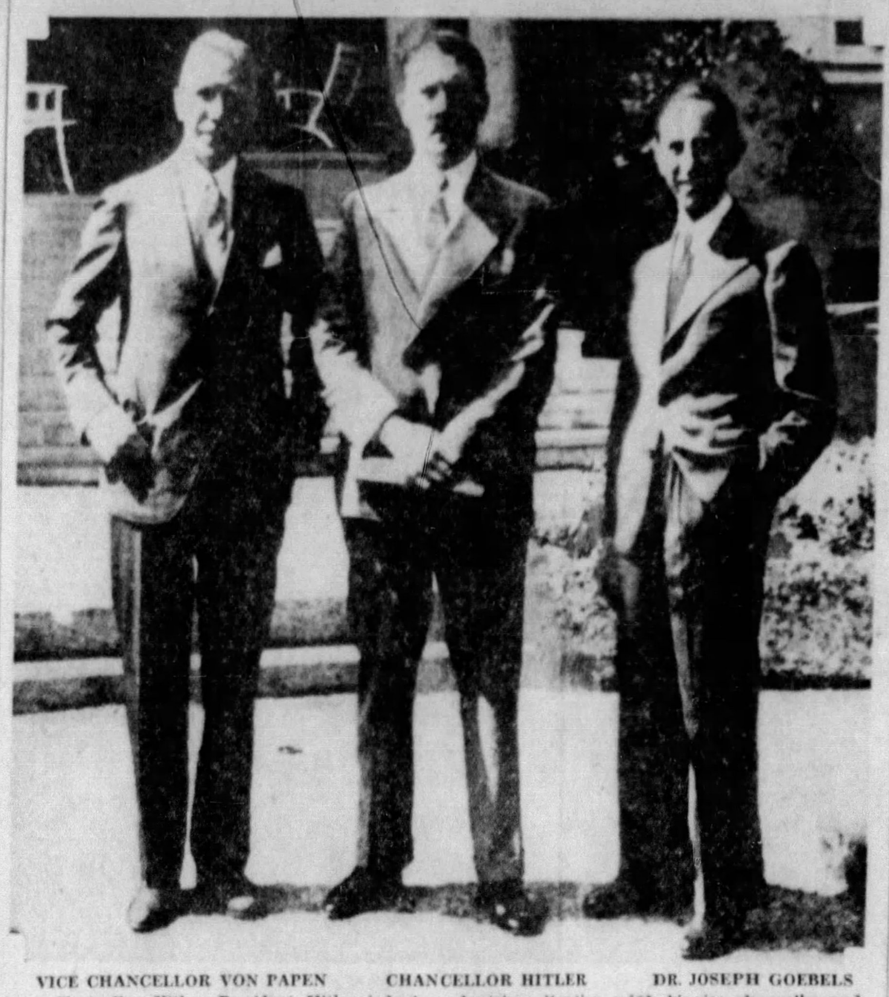
The body will be taken to Hohenstein, a small town close to the Gannenburg monument, the scene of state observance. Government officials, diplomats and von Hindenburg's brothers-in-arms, as well as a large number of fellow citizens from all parts of Germany, will attend.

Thus it will be East Prussia, the province in which the Hindenburg family rose and where the field marshal played an important role as a soldier which will be the background of the service—not the capital.

The body will be brought the 30 miles back to Neudeck Saturday and there it will be buried.

It was said that von Hindenburg did not wish to be buried in the Neudeck cemetery but, instead, had selected a solitary spot a short distance from the Neudeck mansion. It is in the mi[illegible] wide lawn [illegible] there are [illegible] be h[illegible]

Hitler and His Chief Aides



VICE CHANCELLOR VON PAPEN — CHANCELLOR HITLER — DR. JOSEPH GOEBELS

HITLER RULES GERMANY AS MASTER

the Storm Troopers were competitors of the army.

Today in the acquiescence of the army, Hitler is reaping the benefit of that act and of his subsequent Reichstag speech when, lauding the Reichswehr, he declared:

"I would never have put the army under the command of a man like Roehm."

ARMY OUTWITTED

Today it is too soon after June 30 for the army to have forgotten its debt of gratitude. But even if the army had wanted to act today, Hitler's speed of movement took their breath away. The army did not want Hitler as commander-in-chief. They did not mind him as Chancellor. Furthermore, as long as Hitler was only Chancellor and another man was President, the army working behind the President could at any time eject Hitler by legal means.

Once Hitler was made commander in chief, the army could only get rid of him by mutiny.

That was the army's calculation, and that is why it would have been for Hitler hazardous to let events take their normal course, let Bumke become President pro tem., and wait for an election. Now, however, Hitler has named himself supreme commander, and the army is faced with an accomplished fact.

It was all done with typical Hitler forcefulness, secrecy and speed. At a confidential cabinet meeting last night, the new law making him President and Chancellor was passed with the provision that it came into effect the moment Hindenburg died. Hindenburg died at 9 o'clock. Within one hour Goebbels announced the decree to the nation, and army commanders all over Germany learned by radio that they had a new chief and his name was Hitler. To revolt against Hitler now would mean mutiny.

FOES TRICKED

This ends 17 months of speculation by Hitler's opponents about how they would get Hitler out. First they counted on Hindenburg's acting to stop Nazi indiscretions. They counted on him to the very end and when they saw he was probably never going to act, they counted then on his death when, many believed, the army would take control.

They thought Hindenburg had only to let Hitler come to power to demonstrate to the German people his expected failure to lift his country out of its economic troubles and make it once more a power in international affairs.

Now those hopeful ones have seen Germany go down to the level of war-time economy at home and become more isolated abroad than ever since the fighting stopped on the western front. They have seen all that happen, and still Hindenburg did not move. Today they have seen him die and the army still did not move.

What is the answer? First, Hitler did what all good dictators do when they come to power. He crushed all other political parties, killed, imprisoned, drove out of the country or otherwise removed from the political field every conceivable opponent, so that today he is the only leader left.

Second, by the combined powers of terror and propaganda, Hitler reduced the nation to such apathy that nothing like a popular uprising could be conceived. The only possible force that could have moved against the present regime was the army and that only under a strong and determined leader.

LEADER LACKING

The army has no man who wanted to take the initiative. It has no general with known political ambitions.

Thirdly and finally, however, Hitler has impressed many Germans with the hope that he intends to take a new and conservative course. There is no doubt but that he has grown with his job.

The bloody event of June 30 interrupted this growth. But today, even Germans hostile to Hitler are inclined to see new hopeful possibilities in his accession to supreme power. They believe it may sober him. Hitherto he had always to reckon with what Hindenburg might do.

Until now he could always say to his party leaders and to himself that certain things could not be done because Hindenburg might check him. Today he has absolutely no alibi for anything his government does. He is the entire government.

Army Swears Loyalty To Hitler as Chief

By PIERRE HUSS

International News Service.

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—At 9 o'clock this morning, the very moment that President Paul von Hindenburg died, Adolf Hitler, once an obscure lance-corporal in Hindenburg's armies, took over the helm of the German nation, succeeding Hindenburg in the presidential office.

The cabinet, meeting in extraordinary session last night, had decreed that the succession should pass at the exact minute that the warrior-President died.

Hitler, retaining his full powers as Chancellor and leader of Germany's powerful and only political party, the Nazis, is now master of the Fatherland's army, naval and civil administration. In short, he is the complete unfettered boss of the nation.

To emphasize Hitler's new status as commander-in-chief of the army, Gen. Werner von Blomberg, minister of war, ordered all branches sworn in immediately to allegiance to the Chancellor-President.

TEXT OF OATH

The text of the oath follows:

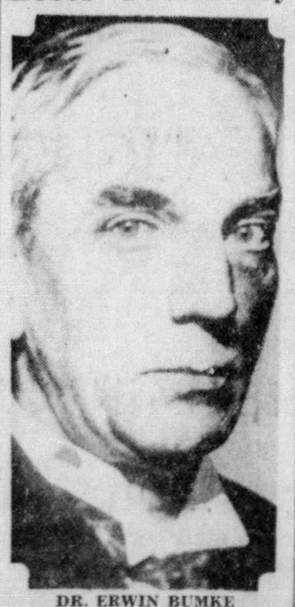
"I swear this holy oath to God that I will unconditionally obey Adolf Hitler, Fuehrer (leader) of the German Reich and nation and supreme commander of the army and navy and will be ready as a brave soldier to sacrifice my life at any time for the sake of this oath."

Announcement that Hitler had assumed the presidency, merging the two offices of Reichschancellor and Reichspresident into one as forecast by International News Service Tuesday when President von Hindenburg's serious condition became known, was made by Dr. Joseph Paul Goebbels, minister of propaganda, in a nation-wide radio broadcast.

It is believed Hitler will make the appointment immediately after the great state funeral decreed for von Hindenburg.

Vice Chancellor Franz von Papen, President von Hindenburg's dearest friend, was attending a requiem mass at St. Hedwig's Cathedral for the murdered Chancellor Dollfuss of Austria when informed of the old veteran's death. He hung his head and went silently to his home.

Loses Presidency



DR. ERWIN BUMKE

Dr. Bumke, Germany's Supreme Court chief justice who would have succeeded to the presidency—except that Chancellor Hitler under his wide powers passed a new law, made himself president.

MARSHAL DREW 'WILL' AT 12

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—To Germans, Paul von Hindenburg was not only an unusual field Marshal and President, but a lovable and loving character whose humor and good nature endeared him to the millions.

Death came to him 74 years after he wrote his last will and testament at the age of 12. That will, of course, is not taken seriously, but it testifies to the good nature and sense of humor which were two of the many qualities which marked his character.

When young Paul joined the cadets of the Scholl Wahlstatt he wrote a will providing that his toys should be distributed between his brother and sister. To a needy schoolmate he bequeathed a sandwich for breakfast every morning. The postscript on this document was characteristic. It read:

"Peace and quiet I ask forever."

The superior human qualities of Germany's dead soldier-president were exemplified by the following words which he spoke after the Battle of Masurian Lakes:

"I am rather ashamed that I did not feel cold back there in the safe headquarters. At that time I could not be at the front as I was at the Battle of Tannenburg.

"Almost every day I ran for two hours against the bitterly cold wind to bring to my conscience what hardships our poor soldiers had to stand up against out in the trenches."

Dared Victors To 'Drag Me In Chains'

International News Service.

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—No sooner had Field Marshal Paul von Hindenburg returned to take up his life where he had left it at the outbreak of the World War than he was the victim of Allied politicians.

The war ended and the political leaders promised things quite unfulfillable.

Among them was the article of the Versailles Treaty by which Germany offered to turn over the Kaiser and "responsible war officers" to the Allied courts for trial. Nothing came of it except an exceptional observation from the veteran German general:

"If Field Marshals Foch and Haig think it will add to their military standings, brighten the records of their deeds or enrich their escutcheons by dragging me in chains behind their victorious chariots, I am willing to go. But I, and I alone, go, for I, and I alone, was responsible for the conduct of the war. No other man goes with me."

It silenced the rabble-batters.

Hindenburg Family Urges No Flowers

NEUDECK, Aug. 2.—(INS.)—The family of President von Hindenburg appealed to the nation today to cease sending wreaths to Neudeck, reminding all Germans that they could best honor the dead president by remembering suffering people and aiding the unemployed.

LEAGUE SENDS CONDOLENCES

International News Service.

GENEVA, Aug. 2.—President von Hindenburg's death will gravely complicate the situation in the Reich, according to the belief in League of Nations circles.

Joseph Avenol, secretary general of the League, sent the following message to the German minister of Foreign Affairs, Baron Konstantin von Neurath:

POPE TROUBLED FOR BEREAVED GERMANY

Bishop Bernard J. Mahoney of Sioux Falls, S. D., the first of four American bishops received by the Pope, said His Holiness referred to the death of Von Hindenburg in troubled tones.

Bishops Joseph F. Rummel, of Omaha; Jullels B. Jeanmard, of Lafayette, La., and Richard O. Gerow, of Natchez, Miss., also were received. Bishop Rummel said the Pope again referred to the death of von Hindenburg, expressing the feeling that it could not fail to add to the strain of difficulties in Germany and Europe.

The news of the death of von Hindenburg reached the Pope as he was in the midst of his first audience. He directed that a telegram expressing condolences be sent immediately to German authorities. The message was prepared by Cardinal Pacelli, secretary of state of the Vatican.

HEALTH TAXED FOR YEARS

Universal Service.

BERLIN, Aug. 1.—All during the period of unrest, President von Hindenburg's health was taxed to the utmost. Everything depended upon his ability as a statesman to maneuver the ship of state over the many reefs.

One day, the report was whispered around that he had fallen down the stairs and sustained severe injuries. As a matter of fact, he had not fallen down stairs. The incident was as follows:

Before the gate of his palace stand two soldiers. One of Hindenburg's little granddaughters, a girl of about 7, was poking fun at one of the soldiers, and was tickling his neck with a long blade of grass. The soldier squirmed and twitched his face, but did not dare to make a move. The old Field Marshall witnessed the scene from the window. He wanted to come to the rescue of his soldier and was on the point of opening the window when he slipped and fell. He was too weak to get up again and could do nothing more than cry at the top of his voice for help. Unfortunately, nobody passed by his room until about 10 minutes later, whereupon he was lifted to his feet again and conducted to a chair.

BRITONS MOURN HINDENBURG DEMISE

LONDON, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Sincere grief and considerable apprehension over the political future of Germany was manifest in British government circles today after the death of President Paul von Hindenburg.

Even during the World War years, when the so-called "Hindenburg pillboxes" on the Belgian coast menaced England, all Britons held the German military leader in great respect.

Since then he has been regarded as the chief stabilizing force for both Republican and Hitlerite Germany.

The news that Chancellor Adolf Hitler had taken over the presidency as well as the chancellorship came as no surprise to official quarters here, where this development had been anticipated for the last two days.

King George, in a message to Col. Oskar von Hindenburg, the late president's son, said:

"I have learned with profound regret the death of your distinguished father, whose qualities both as a soldier and statesman will ensure him an honored place in the annals of your country."

ITALY SILENT ON HITLER

ROME, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—News that Chancellor Hitler had succeeded to the presidency of Germany was received calmly today by Italian official circles.

They adopted the attitude that no outside criticism was called for. A spokesman said:

"The German people have a right to do as they wish. So long as they are content no comment is necessary."

He said any message of condolence upon the death of President von Hindenburg would be sent directly by Premier Mussolini, who is visiting in his home town of Forli.

Rome newspapers issued extra editions telling of the statesman-soldier's death. All lauded him as a great warrior and president.

Church Bells Toll For Von Hindenburg

FREYSTADT, Germany, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Church bells rang mournfully today in this town, the closest to the Neudeck estate where President von Hindenburg died.

All flags were immediately lowered to half staff. The population gathered into the streets and discussed the death of the country's "father" in whispers.

Paris Writer Fears War In Germany

International News Service.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—Grave concern lest the death of President von Hindenburg lead to civil war in Germany with possibly all Europe becoming involved was expressed by the influential Paris evening paper, L'Intransigeant, today.

While French officialdom, from the President of the republic to lower functionaries, was expressing its condolences to the German government, the Intransigeant appeared on the boulevards with a first-page editorial revealing its apprehensions.

Hindenburg was one of the few Germans who inspired the silent admiration of the French press, which is habitually bitter against the German leaders in the World War. Comment on his death, and during his illness, showed a complete absence of animosity.

The death of the field marshal occurred on the twentieth anniversary of France's mobilization for war.

PERSHING LAUDS DEPARTED FOE

International News Service.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—The manly qualities and soldierly genius of President Paul von Hindenburg were praised by Gen. John J. Pershing, who commanded the American Expeditionary Forces in France during the World War, when he was informed of his former foe's death today. Pershing said:

"I always admired Field Marshal von Hindenburg as a man. He will long be remembered as one of the outstanding figures of the World War. His masterly conduct of his campaign on the eastern front marks him as a great general. Devotion to Germany and her people, whether in a military or a civil capacity was his most striking characteristic."

Gen. Pershing received the news of von Hindenburg's death at the Hotel Crillon where he lived when he first came to France in 1917 to fight the Hindenburg armies.

Crown Prince Wires Expression of Grief

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—(INS.)—The Crown Prince Frederick Willhelm telegraphed his condolences on the death of President von Hindenburg to Neudeck today, according to his aide, Maj. von Mueldner.

Prince August Wilhelm, the second son of the former Kaiser, who has been on a vacation since he was disciplined by Gen. Hermann Wilhelm Goering after the "Roehm revolt" on June 30, was rushing back to his palace at Potsdam, where he was expected to arrive tonight.

SECRETARY HULL PAYS TRIBUTE TO MARSHAL

International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—This government's sorrow at the death of President Paul von Hindenburg was expressed today in a formal statement issued by Secretary of State Hull shortly after receiving news of the passing of Germany's "Grand Old Man." Secretary Hull's statement said:

"The news of the death of President von Hindenburg has just reached me.

"In his passing, the world has lost an outstanding figure, whose character, integrity and loyal devotion to his country has commanded the respect and admiration of all people.

"I join with my fellow countrymen in expressing sincerest sympathy with the people of Germany in the loss of their beloved President."

Meanwhile, the German embassy was placed in mourning.

The red, black and white flag of the German nation was lowered to half staff and all social engagements cancelled. Mourning will last for a month, Dr. Rudolf Leitner, the German charge d'affaires said.

Within a short time after issuing his statement of personal regret, Secretary Hull sent a message of condolence to Baron Konstantin von Neurath, the German foreign minister. The message said:

"I extend to your excellency sincerest condolences on the death of your beloved and venerable President.

"My fellow citizens join with me in mourning the passing of this great figure whose services to his country have commended universal respect."

Mass Held in Berlin In Dollfuss Memory

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—On this, the death-day of Germany's idol and President, Paul von Hindenburg, a requiem mass was held for another government leader—the late "vest pocket" Chancellor of neighboring Austria, Engelbert Dollfuss.

Franz von Papen, close friend to von Hindenburg, was designated by Chancellor Hitler as his personal representative at the church service.

Germany Loses Two Generals in 2 Days

BERLIN, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—President von Hindenburg was the second German general to die in two days. The other was his classmate, Maj. Gen. Ludwig Koenigk.

Gen. Koenigk was 87, one year older than von Hindenburg, but they attended the Lichterfelde cadet training school together from 1863 to 1866.

VON HINDENBURG WON PRAISES OF KAISER AND FOCH ALIKE

Associated Press.

In November, 1914, when von Hindenburg was in charge of the campaign against the Russians, Emperor William, in promoting him to a field marshal, sent him the following congratulatory telegram:

"I am proud of your having reached the highest military rank at the head of such troops. Your fighting spirit and perseverance have in a marvelous manner inflicted the greatest losses on the enemy. But the enemy is not yet annihilated. Therefore go forward, with God for our king and the fatherland, till the last Russian is subdued and at our feet. Hurrah!"

He defended the flight to Holland of Emperor William in the fall of 1918 in these words:

"The Emperor could have betaken himself to the fighting troops in order to meet death at their head in a last attack upon the enemy, but the armistice so keenly desired by the people would thereby have been postponed and the lives of many soldiers uselessly sacrificed. The Emperor finally, in agreement with his advisers and after a severe mental struggle, decided to leave the country, solely in the hope that he could thereby best serve the fatherland, save Germany from further losses, distress and misery, and restore peace and order to her."

In July, 1919, after his resignation as chief of general staff, he told a body of students from Goettingen who called upon him:

"If our foes want to stand an old man like me, who has but done his duty, up against a wall, they may have me."

Marshal Foch's appreciation of his former adversary was summed up in these words:

"Marshal von Hindenburg is a gentleman of absolute loyalty."

Below his stern, solemn mien there was a keen sense of humor. A friend once asked him how he managed to keep his temper. He replied:

"That's very simple. Whenever I am in danger of getting angry, I whistle."

And when the friend insisted he had never heard von Hindenburg whistle, the President replied:

"I haven't been angry... either."

He attended his first movie in February, 1929. The show was "Waterloo," and he was surprised at the accuracy with which historical specs were reproduced on the screen.

The following year, for the first time since assuming the presidency, he permitted movie men to film him at work at his desk.

The number of letters he received each year ran to 100,000.

SMITH LIKELY TO QUIT N. Y. REFORM ROW

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Alfred E. Smith is prepared to resign from the City Charter Commission Commission, it was learned authoritatively today, unless his proposals for municipal reform are adopted.

Smith is chairman of the commission, appointed last spring by Gov. Lehman and the State Legislature to modernize the government under which the state's metropolis operates.

The former governor and Samuel Seabury, power behind the LaGuardia city administration, urged the unification of the Board of Aldermen and the Board of Estimate, but these and other changes were voted down by their colleagues.

RESIGNATION READY

If the commission of 28 members refuses to reconsider the action at a meeting today, it was learned, Smith will tender a letter of resignation which he already has drafted.

There were reports that Seabury was prepared to take a similar step, but at the attorney's office inquirers were referred to Smith. The latter could not be reached directly.

The commission, composed of Democratic, Republican and Socialist leaders, has been meeting throughout the summer in an effort to complete a new charter for submission to the voters at the November election.

AWAIT NEW VOTE

Smith and Seabury, who conducted the Legislative investigation of city affairs, in 1932, during which Mayor James J. Walker resigned, met their first setback when the commission refused to abolish the positions of borough presidents.

The two men argued that these five officers are wasteful duplication and create inefficiency within the city government. The commission finally approved a compromise under which the borough presidents would have limited powers, but present indications are that a reversal of the vote may give them their present authority.

'She Who Got Slapped' Sues Rich Wife

NITA CAVALIER

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 2.—(INS.)—For an alleged slap, declared to have been administered in public, Nita Cavalier, pretty film actress, will seek $10,000 damages.

The blow was alleged to have been delivered by Mrs. G. Benton Wilson, wife of the former commodore of the exclusive California Yacht Club.

The altercation on a city street was precipitated by an alleged false accusation on the part of Mrs. Wilson that "Miss Cavalier was about to meet Wilson," according to the actress' complaint.

HOMES SHARE IN $15,000

In her will, filed for probate today, Mary M. Bowman, of 1402 Sheffield street, disposes of a $15,000 estate by leaving $500 and the residue to the Francis Campbell Hamilton Home for Aged, $1,000 to Elizabeth A. Bradley Children's Home of the Methodist Episcopal Church, $1,000 to the Louis Starr Missionary Society of Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church. To 11 relatives and eight friends she makes bequests of $1,000 or less.

Mrs. Margaret S. Doty, of Ben Avon, leaves her $10,000 estate to her son, Attorney William S. Doty.

JURIST SHUNS M'ADOO SUIT SQUABBLE

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Holding that he had not authority to act upon the order of another Judge, Superior Judge Charles L. Bogue has refused to hear the motion to strike Presiding Judge Frank C. Collier's so-called "report" on the 43-minute divorce of Mrs. Eleanor Wilson McAdoo from the record of the case.

Judge Bogue held yesterday that Judge Collier was the proper person to hear the motion and continued the case, transferring it to the presiding judge's department.

Judge Collier, in his report, described the actions of Attorney Henry Grivi, who represented Mrs. McAdoo, as "contemptible if not contumacious" and said by rushing through the decree he had "brought the court into disrepute."

R. Dean Warner, attorney, who represented Senator William Gibbs McAdoo and made the motion, branded Judge Collier's report as an "extra-judicial statement" and "a piece of paper," not to be dignified by the title of a court order.

He told Judge Bogue:

"It is our opinion and one of the arguments we intend to advance that Judge Collier butted his nose into these proceedings without any authority whatsoever.

"We consider this document an extra-judicial statement, the act of an irresponsible citizen and not an act of a Superior Court judge. I have been unable to find any point of law which authorizes one judge to file a report upon a judicial act of another judge of the same court."

Bees Rout Sleeper, Seize His Bedroom

ELORA, Ontario, Aug. 2—James Mahoney, of Salem, was driven from his bedroom by a swarm of bees, but he profited by it. He tore down the wall of the room and found more than 100 pounds of honey which his family and neighbors enjoyed.

SENATOR HURT IN AUTO PLUNGE

WESTPORT, N. Y., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Injured when their automobile left the highway and dropped 20 feet into a brook near here, United States Senator Robert F. Wagner and Representative Anning S. Prall, of Staten Island, showed steady improvement today under the care of Dr. Harold J. Harris.

Representative Prall was the most severely injured, suffering a compound fracture of the lower right leg and numerous face and head lacerations.

Senator Wagner, who was en route with Prall to a fishing camp in Quebec, Canada, fractured two ribs and was bruised about the body.

The men were injured when Senator Wagner, in passing one truck on a curve of a winding road, drove his car off the highway to avoid hitting another truck coming from the opposite direction.

Wagner only recently returned from Seattle, scene of the recent longshoremen's strike, where he narrowly escaped injury from gun fire of officers who thought his party comprised strikers.

'MY OLD ENEMY' :-: David Lloyd George

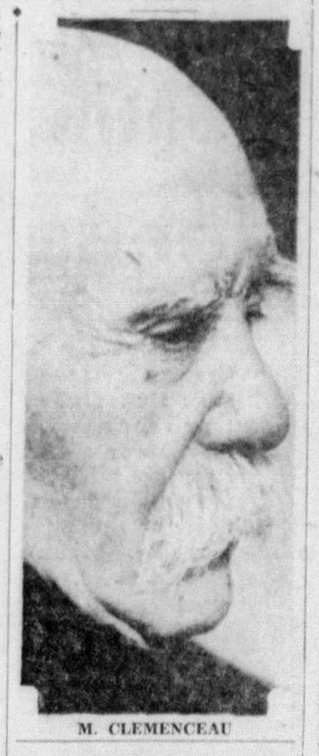
and concern were all for the land they loved with the simplicity and single-mindedness of great hearts.

WHEN Paul von Hindenburg was called upon to take chief command, he was in his seventieth year. His great French antagonist, M. Clemenceau, was nigh unto his eightieth year. The octogenarian won.

They had both taken part in the War of 1870-71—von Hindenburg as a young officer, Clemenceau as the Mayor of Montmartre, helping to organize the defense and provisionment of beleaguered Paris. He was still Mayor when Lieut. von Hindenburg, of the Prussian Guards, rode through the Arc de Triomphe when Paris surrendered.

When Clemenceau visited the French front line on the eve of the decisive battle of Rheims in July, 1918, he, as leader of France, faced the same von Hindenburg, as the practical leader of Germany in the last stage of the war of "revanche" (revenge) of which Clemenceau had dreamed.



M. CLEMENCEAU

Von Hindenburg was unquestionably a great patriot. But was he not also a great soldier. I cannot tell. The great military achievement which hurtled him in one leap from obscurity into dazzling fame was the battle of Tannenburg.

There are two brilliant soldiers to whom, in the alternative, the strategy of the famous battle is ascribed — Ludendorff and Hoffman. Ludendorff was responsible for working out the plan that destroyed the Russian armies. But Hoffman's admirers claim that the idea was his, and that it was about to be put into operation before ever von Hindenburg and Ludendorff arrived on the scene.

Mr. Churchill, who knew Hoffman, lends his powerful pen to an exposition of that theory. What remains beyond challenge is the fact that the final decision and act came from von Hindenburg.

THEN there was the Hindenburg Line. That was a great military achievement. Who was responsible for that conception? There are many claimants for that honor and they can make a case. But the dominant note of great men of action is not that they necessarily originate ideas, but that they know how to choose the best available men to suggest and work out the plans—that among a multitude of ideas they have an instinct that leads them to pick the best and that, once they have made their selection, they act with all the strength at their disposal without allowing themselves to be entangled in secondary considerations. That was von Hindenburg's strength. The Hindenburg line is characteristic of the man.

The Germans were holding a line which, owing to the battle of the Somme, had become a salient. Its defense absorbed a great many divisions which the Germans needed for creation of a mobile reserve. If the line were straightened out, a great number of troops would be released from the trenches for that purpose. The salient was a source of danger and weakness to the Germans and of opportunity for their foes.

On the other hand, to retire from it would involve the abandonment of scores of square miles of territory, conquered and held by German valor and blood, and retreat would be regarded as acknowledgment of weakness in Germany, as well as by the enemy.

A WEAKER man would not have faced the implication. We held the useless salient at Ypres for four years, and lost heavily in consequence. Von Hindenburg faced about and, by that act of courage, was in a position to beat off the terrible onslaught of the British and French forces at Chemin Des Dames, Arras, and Passchendaele.

He swept aside all secondary appeals and inducements that would have deflected the judgment of smaller men. Without von Hindenburg's great personality, I doubt whether that supreme decision would or could have been taken.

These incidents revealed the rugged strength of his character. They also proved that in charge of that character there was a virile, clear-sighted and sound intelligence. He possessed common sense and in an uncommon measure. That is not far removed from genius, and, if it is not actual genius, then it is a quality which is more useful in an emergency than many other glittering gifts.

It was my destiny to be called upon to cope with this redoubtable adversary. Gen. von Moltke had died in failure. Gen. Falkenhayn—a much abler soldier than his predecessor — had fooled away his opportunity over the siege of Verdun.

The tremendous attacks of the battle of the Somme were absorbing German strength. Austria had sustained serious defeat at the hands of Gen. Brusiloff. Rumania had thrown in her lot with the Allies.

Falkenhayn was forced to resign and von Hindenburg was elevated to the supreme command.

IN a short time he transformed the position of the Central Powers. Rumania was crushed like an egg shell, whilst, at the same time, the Allies were held up on the Somme plateau. The German army was reorganized and formidable preparations were made in the east and west for the campaign of 1917. It was a triumph of leadership.

When I was called to the premiership at the end of 1916, the resolute leadership of von Hindenburg was in full swing and the Allies felt its effect. It was responsible for the fall of Marshal Joffre in France and Premier Asquith in Britain.

It is not for me, in the course of a short article, to show how this fine old warrior imbued the whole German army with his tenacious and dauntless spirit. No other man could have put up such a fight for the Fatherland. Even in defeat he stood firm and undismayed.

Von Hindenburg's subsequent acceptance of the republic and his determination to work under the new constitution honestly and sincerely showed the same attributes of sanity, judgment and real patriotism.

The hesitation and reluctance he displayed before he could be persuaded to make terms with Nazism and turn over the government of his country to inchoate fanaticism was quite in keeping with his general attitude of mind. Ultimately, under the pressure of circumstances, he gave way. But by that time his health had been undermined by a fell disease, which his advanced age disabled him from fighting. He cannot fairly be held responsible for events of the past years.

HE has left the Fatherland he loved in a more hopeless condition than it has ever been in almost since its great defeat. Diplomatically, Germany is completely isolated.

The sympathy which she had won in Europe and America by the moderation of statesmen like Gustave Stresseman and Heinrich Bruening, and also owing to the intransigeance of French statesmen like Raymond Poincare and Andre Tardieu, has been chilled by the recent outrages into frosty repugnance.

Economically, the German outlook is black. Politically, the future of Germany is obscure and uncertain.

A government can for some time repress liberty in a prosperous country. But when privation afflicts a large and growing section of the population and when even those who are still comfortable are surrounded by accumulating troubles, no autocracy can feel secure.

There is no man in Germany who commands the reverence which attaches to von Hindenburg's name. Chancellor Hitler may still be popular, but his popularity has not struck its roots as deeply into the hearts of the German people as did those of the towering figure who has been stricken down by the great destroyer.

The knowledge that von Hindenburg was behind Hitler gave confidence to those who had their doubts.

The place that knows him will know him no more. And there is no other who can fill that place.

SPEAK UP, SISTERS

:-: Glances Into the Realms of Domesticity and Romance :-:

By MARION BRUNOT

Fear Probably Causes Misers to Hoard

HIDDEN RICHES, $500 and $1,000 bills found in a laundry bag . . . and after the lonely old woman had died somewhere in Wisconsin.

And the house guarded by the police while the hunt for the elusive gold goes on.

A miser. Or was she? Or was it that she was AFRAID? Was it that she imagined the wolf howling at her door, and that the weary trudge over the hills to the poorhouse might be hers?

Miss Brunot

And yet she couldn't take it over the River Jordan . . . She had to leave it behind. And the old laundry bag was as good a place as any other. . . .

I knew a man once, a rich old codger who kept his sons and daughters on pins and needles for fear they'd be left out of his will. . . . In the early days he had come as a poor boy, steerage, from Ireland, and by and by, aided by the oil regions of Pennsylvania, and by careful investments he became a power even among bankers. He managed to live out his three score and ten, and with everything about him that money could buy. . . .

HID MONEY

But for many years before he died, he had the habit of depositing good-sized greenbacks in odd places. Under the removable seats of chairs, under the marble bust on the pedestal. Under the corners of Oriental rugs. Under mattresses, and in secluded nooks of cupboards he meticulously secreted these pieces of money . . . And when the old man had breathed his last . . . what a scurry there was for the furniture, and the bric-a-brac and the unfrequented places in his richly furnished New York apartment.

"Queer old duffer," his executors said. . . .

Yet it was FEAR again that had him. That boyhood fettered by poverty oppressed him. It hung like a dark cloud over the sunshine of his maturity.

He wasn't to be hungry again, and in rags. No sir-ee.

Chances are, you and I, sisters, never have had the opportunity to be misers . . . The old woman in Wisconsin and the aged banker in New York are odd "cusses" to us . . . Why didn't they have more fun out of life? Why didn't the old woman go around the world, and why didn't the aged banker endow a hospital for children.

DESIRES NUMEROUS

We want so many things, you and I . . . We want dresses, and trips, and parties for our friends . . . We want a new swing for the front porch, and new coverings for the living room chairs . . . We want pictures on the walls, and desserts on china plates.

The things we want are odd. I know one woman who has been wanting a globe of the world for years, but has never gotten ahead enough money to buy it . . . I know another sister who desires a three-ply cooker for her kitchen. But she can't find the extra cash to get it . . . I can think of a pretty girl who would give any accumulated cash she could lay her hands on for a mink coat . . . She eyes hungrily all such luxurious coats. She even window-gazes for them . . . sits in hotel lobbies and sees them go by.

Oh, we're funny folk . . . We waste much of our time on our material desires . . . And when finally we die, our executors may say about us what they did about the aged New York banker:

"Queer old duffer . . ."

SAVED FROM BULLY

Dear Miss Brunot:

I am a constant reader of your daily column in the Sun-Telegraph . . . Last Sunday I went down the river to swim in one of the good places. While in swimming a smarty began ducking me . . . I can stand a joke once in awhile, but when he kept it up and didn't even give me a chance to get my breath, I put up a fight. When suddenly another young man came along, and told him to quit, I thanked him, and he and I swam, and talked together.

I said it was time to go home, and he walked home with me. He asked me for a date, and I agreed. I didn't realize it was as late as it was, for when I got home it was half after nine. I introduced him to my mother. And he sat on the porch, and went home about an hour later . . . I walked out with him another evening, and it was much later when I got back, and there was my dad waiting for me.

And he was very mean and cross with this fellow. I am very much in love with him. There is not very much difference in our ages. Please tell me whether I should write a note of apology for what my dad said to him? I haven't seen him since. I am very, very hard to please. But he comes up to the mark.

IN LOVE.

If this fellow's intentions were good, you will see him again, without having to write the note of apology. You admit it wasn't so early when he got you home, and your father may have thought you did not know him well enough to stay out with him as you did. If the young man is right-thinking, he will realize your father had a reason for his remarks. And not think hard of either you or him for them. The fact that one man rescues you from another is no reason for you to put implicit faith in him. It is quite a cave-man act, sister.

And yet it was gallant in him to do so . . . and I can't help, being a woman, but see very plainly how he won you. I really believe you will see him again, and that everything will come out nicely for you. Swimming is a fine pastime, and I like to hear of the sisters in the Speak Up column enjoying it.

Miss Brunot will be glad to answer letters submitted to her by readers.

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

If a light toned eye shadow is used—mauve, gray, or faint blue—the effect is better when the brown crayon is used on lashes. Not all women can get away with dark shades, like purple, green, darker blue. Those who can don't need the lash darkener.

There's a tendency now to have the shadow faint at the inner corner of the lid, a bit heavier at the far end. It is believed that this trick makes eyes look larger. However, there can be no set rules; much depends upon profile, features, the color of the eyes.

Whether or not a woman can detach herself from excess weights and measurements depends upon the power of her will. If she thinks more of good groceries than she does of her shape all is lost.

The heavyweight isn't always a heavy eater. She eats the wrong things. She is inclined to love butter, cream, pastries and cereals all of which are builders of adipose tissue. Let her cut these down to the limit, and the reward will be reaped.

She can eat lean meats, fish, poultry, vegetables that grow above ground — no potatoes—green salads, fruits, toasted rye bread, clear tea and coffee. This diet will turn the trick. There will be no call for vigorous exercise.

HASTY WORDS CAN DESTROY LIFE FRIENDSHIPS, SAYS FAY KING

By FAY KING

It takes a long time to become good friends, and only a moment to destroy friendship.

There is probably nothing more useless than hasty words and silly quarrels.

Yet one of the most difficult things in life is to keep from saying the harsh things one feels justified in saying at a moment of misunderstanding and anger.

If you have reason to speak your mind by word or writing, you can be sure that is the very moment when silence is the wisest.

A few hours can make a great difference. In one's viewpoint, and there is no regret so great as that of wishing one had waited and not said this, or not written that.

"Nothing" never does anyone any harm one way or the other.

Correct Manners

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Back Home

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

We have just recently moved back to this city after being away for several years. Our friends know of our return. Some have come to visit us, but somehow the old cordiality doesn't seem apparent. They don't call me for the usual games, and so forth, as was the practice before.

Should I invite them to my home for a party? Is that the customary thing to do?

READER.

Since you and your husband have lived in this city before, perhaps your friends do not take the attitude that you are newcomers in the community. And I do think that it would be very sensible for you to plan a party inviting the group to your re-established home. Don't stand on quite the ceremony that you would if you hadn't lived here before, but give parties to re-establish your place. This will, I am sure, revive the old cordiality.

Graduation Party

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

We are a group of three girls. We are planning to have a graduation party at my father's cafe. Should all three names be written on each invitation?

Will you please word such an invitation, as we wish to have it all done correctly? Would it be good form to write the invitations on paper like this? K.

It would be most convenient for each girl to write her own invitations. Something like this:

Dear Jane:

Mary Jane and Betty and I are having a party to celebrate our graduation, and it is to be given at my father's cafe (100 William street), on Friday, the first of August, at seven o'clock. We all want very much to have you come . . . so do say 'yes.'

Dearest love to you, and the hope of greeting you on the first.

Cordially yours.

Hats and Gloves?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My friends and I have been disputing over the question: should gloves and a hat be worn at a junior-senior banquet? The banquet will take place in the evening, and organdy dresses are to be worn. Y.

Hats would not be worn at this kind of dinner and gloves probably would not be worn at this time of year, unless you wish to wear gloves of organdy or some other light novelty material, to harmonize with your organdy dress.

A Sequel to Heart of a Wife

By ADELE GARRISON

Ruse Works on State Troopers

We did not have to wait long before we found out what the state troopers were going to do. We had gone less than five miles before the car containing the two officers passed us at a speed much exceeding our own.

This time neither man looked back, and I drew a deep breath of relief.

"They must have decided we were all right," I ventured.

"More probably they were not watching for us at all," he answered.

Something perverse in me urged a question.

"Then shall we turn back?"

He waited a second, while I fairly held my breath.

"Presently," he said, and I ventured no more words, feeling my spirits going lower and lower as we kept on our way at the steady 28 he had demanded of Otto. Then, just as my nerves felt frayed beyond endurance, he picked up the tube again and spoke to Otto.

BACK FOR BOB

"Turn around," he said, "and go back as fast as you dare. I'll look out for the troopers and signal you if they're coming."

That Otto needed no encouragement to increase the speed of the car I knew, from drives I myself had taken in this car with him as chauffeur. And the way the big limousine leaped forward spelled the relief that the big chauffeur felt in getting into what he would call action once more.

We retraced our course at such speed that it was not long before we caught sight of Bob, striding along as if he were walking for a wager.

My father spoke into the tube once more.

"Stop when you meet Mr. Robert," he directed, "and open the door for him to get in with you."

Bob was evidently watching us closely, for he halted in his stride as the door swung open, and then dashed across the road, leaped into the seat beside Otto, shut the door and then relaxed against the seat. No sooner had he reached what he evidently regarded as a haven than my father gave another direction to Otto.

"Drive as fast as you can until we reach that turn," he said. "You watch the road in front, and tell Mr. Robert to turn around and watch us. I will keep watch from the rear window and tell my daughter what to tell you. If the road is clear, drive into the woodland road without stopping. If it is not, stop again a few feet away from the entrance."

Otto saluted again, and sent the car along at what seemed to me a terrific pace. As we neared the entrance to the wood road my father told me to signal all clear, and Otto, slowing down enough to make the turn safe, guided the big car into the woodland lane, so narrow that the fenders grazed the bushes on either side.

My father was out of the car as soon as it stopped, and almost ran down the trail, disappearing around a bend, reappearing almost instantly, and rushing back to the side of the car.

"Drive the car around that bend, Otto," he commanded, "and stop just the other side of it. There the car cannot be seen, even if someone should stray into the opening here."

KEEP MADGE OUT

Otto looked at his shining fenders, and then at the underbrush grating against them.

"I don't know what Mr. Veritzen going to say about fenders," he said.

"I'll be responsible to Mr. Veritzen," my father told him crisply, and with a ring in his voice which Otto evidently understood, for he sent the car around the bend with no further demur and brought it to a stop.

"Now," my father said briskly, "Otto, you go with Mr. Robert and help—"

He stopped abruptly and, turning to me, drew me aside.

"I have just realized," he said in a low voice, "that there will be no older head on this expedition, for there is reason why I must stay out. Here with the car. I must not weigh you down with them—"

"Why mustn't you?" I heard myself saying valiantly.

Household Hints

Never store butter, dripping or lard in earthenware vessels, as these absorb grease. Enamel or glass dishes are more satisfactory.

Varnished wallpaper should first be washed in hot water and soap to remove all dirt. Then polish with a warmed mixture of sweet oil and vinegar in equal parts.

Before scrubbing new potatoes soak them for about two hours in water to which a little common soda has been added. They will scrape and clean easily and will not soil the fingers.

LEW CODY SUIT'S BRING $5 EACH AT SALE

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Piece by piece, the possessions of the late Lew Cody, screen actor, went under the auctioneer's hammer as a crowd of 600, most of them curious sightseers, jammed the home and grounds.

The big, rambling English Norman home of Cody on North Maple drive got a bid yesterday of $15,010—$10 more than the minimum the auctioneer said would be acceptable. The house, originally built for Pauline Frederick at a cost of $50,000, has two mortgages against it totaling $15,000.

Roberta M. Love was the successful bidder for the house, but when it came time to sign the papers, it developed Mrs. Love was unable to post immediately the 10 per cent deposit on the mansion, so it remained in the hands of the administrator, and will be offered again.

COSTLY CAR CHEAP

One of the costly six-cylinder English make autos went for only $160, while a new American make small machine was sold for $394. Another big roadster brought $830.

Cody's suits sold at $5 each and a $125 overcoat went for $5. The hot weather killed any sales on the actor's many pairs of spats.

Among the effects were more than a score of suits that made Cody one of the best dressed men in motion pictures. There were 23 pairs of shoes lined up in rows for bidders. Other apparel offered included 29 hats, 53 shirts, 27 pairs of pajamas, 40 neckties and six pairs of spats.

KERRY COMPLAINS

Norman Kerry, movie actor, close friend of Cody, complained to the auctioneer that a woman bidder took for 80 cents a hat Kerry said he paid $15 for as a present for Cody. Some two dozen other hats brought $1 each.

A platinum watch studded with numerous small diamonds, valued at more than $1,000, was sold for $200. It was a 1926 Christmas present from Miss Normand, and bore the inscription:

"Lew, I love you. Mabel."

Small jewelry such as shirt studs, cuff links and the like went for a fraction of their value.

The auctioneer, Dean S. Bedilion, went into the kitchen, opened a window, and sold pots, pans, egg beaters, custard cups and soup ladles over the sill to the crowd outside. He shouted:

"This kettle, here—Just think—a screen star and his wife, the beautiful Mabel Normand, heated water in this kettle for their afternoon tea. How much, how little am I bid for this rare treasure?"

SENTIMENT SLIGHT

A woman thought it was worth fifty cents and went away with it under her arm. Mrs. J. E. O'Brien bought a turkey roaster for $1.35, but said she bid on it not so much for its sentimental as its practical value.

Mrs. C. A. Larson of Westwood paid five cents apiece for 18 small pie pans in which the Cody tarts were cooked. A meat chopper the actor employed in preparing his raw hamburger sandwiches was sold for $1.90.

Going next to the bedroom, the auctioneer held up a mandarin robe lined in red. A woman paid $5 for it and said her husband would be glad to get it.

Piccard Twin and Wife Prepare to Pierce Sky

MRS. JEAN PICCARD

International News Service.

SWARTHMORE, Pa., Aug. 2.—Convinced that "our balloon will not fall apart," an intrepid mother of three children, Mrs. Jean Piccard, and her husband, the twin brother of the world-famed Auguste Piccard, today pored over plans for their forthcoming ascent within a few weeks into the upper reaches of the stratosphere, miles above the earth.

Jean Piccard and his dark-eyed, spirited wife are awaiting completion of scientific instruments being prepared here at the Bartol Research Laboratories of the Franklin Institute, under the supervision of Dr. William F. G. Swann and Dr. Gordon L. Locher.

Undaunted by the fact that the valuable instruments lost in the crash of the ill-fated Army stratosphere balloon Explorer were to have been transferred to the Piccards' balloon for their own ascent, the couple are determined to "go through with it."

Mrs. Piccard, the world's only licensed feminine balloon pilot, stated she could not name a definite date when the pair will go to Detroit for their "take off" into the stratosphere, adding:

"It all depends on how soon the instruments are satisfactorily prepared."

Asked whether she had any apprehension about the danger involved, Mrs. Piccard shook her head and laughed:

"We think the ascent will be quite safe.

"Jean and I have been corresponding with Dr. Auguste Piccard in Europe and my brother-in-law, who should know as much as any living man as far as stratosphere flights are concerned, has assured us of the safety of such a trip.

"However, he did advise us to carry parachutes. We objected to this strenuously at first, but later we decided to take his advice."

Piccard, originally a Swiss, became a naturalized American several years ago. The couple have three children, John, 14; Donald, 8, and Paul, 10. The family home is at Wilmington, Del. The children are at a camp, where they will be kept while the flight is in progress.

Detroit was selected for the "take-off" because of the fact that a balloon in the stratosphere many miles high, usually veers southeast, Mrs. Piccard explained. An ascent from a more easterly point might result in a forced landing into the ocean.

Mrs. Piccard, an American, formerly lived in Chicago. She is tall, athletic-looking and professes to enjoy nothing better than "jesting with my husband."

The instruments being prepared for the Piccards include a counter telescope apparatus, comprising 148 Geiger counter tubes which automatically records and measures the intensity of cosmic rays in the stratospheric realms, and a sphere of "dowmetal," about 40 centimeters in diameter, filled with nitroglycerine to a pressure of 200 pounds.

PARENTS SUE OVER TWINS

Judge James H. Gray yesterday granted Bales a rehearing on the question of custody of the two boys.

Two years ago the mother was awarded care of the twins in habeas corpus proceedings. Six weeks ago, Mrs. Bales was held for court on a morality charge by Alderman Luke Sullivan. Mrs. Mildred Mossart, of 414 Arch street, was the prosecutor.

Mrs. Bales sued for divorce from Bales, her second husband, but no final decree was handed down because court costs remained unpaid. Last February Mrs. Bales was acquitted on a bigamy charge brought by her husband. She has one child by her first marriage.

STRATEGY SET FOR ELECTION

MRS. GELINE M. BOWMAN

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Women intend to pit one political party against another in the fall campaign for the furtherance of their interest, it was announced today by Mrs. Geline MacDonald Bowman, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

What the federation wants, Mrs. Bowman asserted, is more governmental positions for qualified women. She added:

"Both parties talk a lot about the political recognition of women, especially around election time when they want the women to get out and work. We want to find out whether this is just a pat on the back or whether they really mean it."

NEIGHBOR KILLS MOTHER, SON

SHADYSIDE, O., Aug. 2.—A two-year dispute between two families climaxed last night in the murder of Mrs. John Jablonka, 40, and son, John, Jr., 19, by drink-crazed Leonard Fuller, 42, who is held awaiting the filing of charges.

The Jablonkas drove in front of the Fullers' home and an argument started with Fuller. His wife advised them to drive away, saying that her husband was drunk and had a gun. They continued the argument with Fuller, who suddenly shot the youth. His mother leaped from the car, seizing Fuller, who then shot her. Fuller then went to a neighbor's home and surrendered to Village Marshall Joseph Truax.

A 'Touch of the Sun' Is Dangerous

Dr Copeland

Each summer the daily newspapers publish accounts of persons who have been overcome by heat. As a rule the victims are men who have been stricken while at work. Children and young adults are also overcome when exposed to the rays of the sun while at play or engaged in strenuous games.

Sunstroke is caused by a disturbance in the heat regulation of the body. The victim complains of headache and dizziness. This is followed by a feeling of depression, nausea and vomiting. There is difficulty in vision and often the sufferer has colored vision.

The skin is clammy and wet. The pulse becomes exceedingly rapid and weak. The breathing is rapid and the sufferer lapses into unconsciousnes. As a rule he recovers, but in an extreme case death may occur as a result of heart failure, convulsions and coma.

In a case of heat prostration it is always best to consult with a physician. Delay in receiving proper medical attention may lead to a fatal outcome. Until the doctor arrives keep the patient in a cool and shaded room.

Remove all tight garments and encourage the sufferer to drink water. If the body temperature is high, place the victim in a cool tub, kept cool with ice. Continue with the tub bath until the temperature of the body falls to 102 degrees Fahrenheit. The overheated blood will cool in the iced water.

"Touch of the sun," or slight sunstroke, should never be neglected. A mild saline laxative should be taken at once. Absolute rest in a dark room and a diet consisting of whey and fruit juices should be enforced for three days. If the skin is red, apply a saturated solution of magnesium sulphate. This should be freely applied and allowed to dry on the parts.

War Safeguard Seen In Unpopularity Of Governments

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The best American authority (bar none) on the hell-roaring internal politics of present-day Europe returned here a few days ago.

Mr. Mallon.

His inside tale was told to officials at the State Department, who have been as mystified as anyone else, by Europe's swift return to the middle ages. His name cannot be repeated. His views are so tart they would cause widespread international diplomatic colic.

There is no reason, however, why his story should not be told as the most authoritative picture story of Europe from the inside now available.

WAR

It is his view that there are no secure governments in Europe today except those of Italy and Russia. Consequently, he believes the troubles of Europe have only started.

A man would be foolish to say definitely what can and what cannot happen. The underlying situation has such explosive possibilities that impossible things can and have happened. But if anything is certain, it is that there will be no war, no nation pitted in pitched battles against another nation. There will probably be everything else—war invasions, more revolutions, sporadic fighting.

There will probably be no war [illegible] (except-ing are suffi-ciently popular to put troops into the field. Even England is included in that category. He actually doubts that the British could get their troops to cross the channel and invade Germany.

He would not be surprised to see internal trouble in England before the next winter is over.

FRANCE

The French government is so insecure that no one can find out what is holding it up.

The only reason it stands is that the opposition has no outstanding popular leader. A man with the appeal of Mussolini could start a revolutionary movement in France that would sweep the country over night. (Understand that this is a conservative man speaking who has never spoken so strongly before, on or off the record.)

Unquestionably, France is facing disorders. Large numbers of her people have not regained confidence in their form of government since the Stavisky scandal expose, and all its ramifications.

HITLER

Austria is being run by Italy, France and Great Britain, mainly Italy. These nations are using the Dollfuss assassination as an excuse to stamp out the Nazi movement in Austria finally and forever.

That is why Hitler's peace offering of Von Papen as ambassador was not accepted at first in Vienna. The big nations behind Austria wanted to wring a public promise out of Hitler that he would stay out of Austria.

Hitler had nothing directly to do with the Dollfuss murder. He could not have been such a fool. He promised Mussolini to stay out of Austria and apparently intended to keep his promise, for the present, at least.

But his Nazi agitators in Austria kept up a bombardment of incendiary propaganda against Dollfuss. It finally became so hot that Nazi fanatics went out and murdered the vest-pocket dictator.

Any sober Nazi official would have known that such a step would ruin whatever chance Hitler had for ultimate success in Austria.

MILES ALKA SELTZER 30c Size 24c

It is criminal to endanger life by injudicious use of drugs and medicines—think of the hazards you run in buying old, stale and sometimes misbranded medicines from purely bargain stores and counters. They take no responsibility and have no standing with your physician. You are safe and sure when dealing with Ure Druggists.

'Forgotten Man' Hated Raddio

(Chief of Washington Bureau, International News Service. Via Washington Correspondence. Writing for Knickerbocker.)

Probably the most uncomfortable man who ever faced a microphone was Al Smith. Al didn't like it. It cramped his style.

In the first palace, he didn't like to prepare his speeches beforehand. He liked to go on a platform with nothing but a few scribbled notes, get the "feel" of his audience, and then talk to them in the language they understood.

Also, Al used to like to prowl on the platform. The necessity of remaining in one spot, the inability to stride up and down, to make his gestures fit his words irked Al sorely.

"Damn the raddio," he used to say in the campaign of 1928. "I can't talk to it. There's no life there, no feeling." And he never would say radio—it was rad-dio.

I remember in that campaign when he used to say "rad-dio" his daughter used to admonish him gently.

"Radio, father, radio," she would say.

REMAINS 'RADDIO'

Finally, once after he had been admonished a number of times, he turned to her rather expansively:

"Damnit all," he said, "who's Governor of New York, anyway?" Thereafter, it was "radio."

It was said after the campaign that Al Smith beat himself—on the radio, or rad-dio, that if he had not gone on the air with his harsh, guttural voice, his Fulton fish market accent, it might have been a different story.

No one knows, of course, whether that is true; probably in the light of history nothing could have changed that result. But certain it is that Al didn't help himself on the air.

M'NAIR ORDERS HIGHLAND PARK BUS FARE CUT

NEW YORK Day by Day

By O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—The long delayed uprooting of the old downtown postoffice removes about the last of familiar landmarks on the lower nub of the island. A glowering pile, the tobacco-brown structure finally goes the way of the Astor House and the tumbledown that was the Evening Mail building.

The old postoffice seemed eternal in its incorrigible shabbiness but there was something about it, like a mill by a brook, that furnished a sentimental tug among surrounding spires. The northern side was flanked by one of the town's shortest thoroughfares—Mail street.

Through it always swirled a lively scour of breeze and on sultry days disciples of Park Row used to quit journalizing efforts to go there to cool off. A platform for mail bags provided a country depot effect where temporary loafers swapped yarns and smoked cigarets.

David Graham Phillips once made it the exciting locale of a short mystery. It was a few steps from Fulton, the legendary deadline for crooks. There were many other notionable conjectures surrounding the landmark that were seized by fiction romantics. And now it is going.

Sem, the Parisian caricaturist, whose startling exaggerations have cause public face slapping, also writes essays for Paris and American magazines and his manuscripts are perhaps the most unusual ever received in editorial rooms. He writes at his drawing board on three feet wide paper, pasting the finished sheet to a blank one and sending it off in a huge roll. He is 75 now and still the life of every Riviera party.

Narrow Nassau street downtown at noon is rich with human interest. Sidewalks overflow and the parade of stenographers and clerks swings along in steady stream. Curb hawkers offer all the gee-gaws and string orchestras provide music for cafeteria dances. Nassau's Dickensy flavor is attested by the fact Dickens asked to visit it a second time.

The desolation of Paris is best illustrated by the fact that only one night club is going at the peak of the tourist season. This is Florence's on an upland sweep to Montmarte, a muggy little dive with a stool and counted banter. Florence is a coffee brown chanteuse from deep Harlem and went to Paree with the sepia Josephine Baker, who created such to-do she was woed and won by an Italian count with waxed mustaches and everything. O, yes, Sherry's on rue de Castiglione, the American rendezvous for coffee drinkers, and the Hotel Regina are shuttered.

In a far fling of the Bronc I saw about the last of the street organ grinders with his red capped monkey. The organ wheezed but a single tinny tune ranging four sour notes. The moth-eaten monkey seemed even more dispirited but lifted his cap gallantly at the thin sprinkle of pennies—six in all. The old grinder told me he used to take to the open road every summer. But the years laid him low. Small towns were better for the grind organ monkey also for Tony and his performing bear, he said.

One of Broadway's persistently whispered legends is of years of blackmail imposed upon a distinguished actress. In a frolicsome moment she once participated in a rather salacious privately shown film drama at a Spuyten Duyvil bathing party. The original fell into the hands of an extortionist and has been held over the actress's head for 15 years. Joseph Choate once said in court: "A blackmailer's worst threat is but a 10 day sensation. To fear one often means a lifetime of distress."

Mountains Give Balkan Armies Running Start

By ARTHUR (BUGS) BAER

We know it was one of us chartered rascals, but we just can't spot him.

There is a suspicion that it was France playing both ends against the middle.

The big surprise is that the Little Entente has big intentions. When an army comes out of the Balkans it is dangerous because it gets a running start down the side of a mountain.

It's the first time Mussolini ever rang a door bell and got the answer, "Nobody home."

MARSHALL SET FOR COMEBACK IN POLICE JOB

Boyd, Also Planning Return, Says Hoey Is 'A Liar'

Ben R. Marshall, the ailing police superintendent, and Frank R. Boyd, the retired captain of detectives, who have been carrying on feuds with the Police Research Commission, both intend to return to work.

Marshall, back in the city from a convalescence at Dayton, Pa., said that if his health continues to improve he hopes to return to work in five or six weeks.

He celebrated his return to the city by criticizing James N. (The Ump) Hoey, outspoken member of the Police Research Commission:

"I can't understand how certain members of this commission would permit another man (Hoey) to bring up things that are past because he has a personal grudge against certain people."

Public Safety Director A. Marshall Bell said:

"I don't think there's any chance of Marshall coming back as superintendent for quite a long while. I don't think he's physically fit. He is eager, however, to appear before the Police Research Commission."

Mayor McNair indicated he would welcome Marshall back at any time, and added that if Marshall wants to put Boyd back on the force "that's o. k."

Boyd said he regards his plans for reinstatement as an answer to Hoey's charge that he was the graft collector for Marshall.

Supt. Marshall, who is returning before the six-months leave obtained for him by Bell is up, said he was anxious to "get back on the job and raise h——."

It was taken for granted that some of this fire and brimstone will be lighted under the Police Research Commission.

CALLS HOEY 'LIAR'

Marshall has been on leave for two months. A month ago Bell named Jacob F. Dorsey acting superintendent. How Marshall will scan the shakeup of Tuesday, in which friends of Dorsey fared well, remains to be seen.

that Boyd dug up a bottle containing $170,000 stolen from the Brotherhood Savings and Trust Company "and put it back in the mud again" on the lawn of Eddie Goodfellow, Boyd denied:

"Hoey, of course, is a liar. Why did he wait nine years to tell the story? Why didn't he tell it to the District Attorney, who certainly isn't afraid of a guy like me?"

RALLY TO SPUR TOLL BRIDGE

Burgesses and other representatives of all the communities in the southeast part of Allegheny County will gather in the Moose Temple, Homestead, tomorrow night to urge quick action on the construction of the high-level bridge connecting Pittsburgh and Homestead.

The bridge is a part of the $25,000,000 federal project and will be a toll bridge.

Resolutions will be passed commending the County Commissioners and asking that construction begin as soon as possible on the huge structure, which will replace the present Brown's Bridge.

Burgess John Cavanaugh, of Homestead, will preside. Included among the speakers will be Mayor J. S. Crawford, of Duquesne, and M. F. McConnell, superintendent of the Homestead Steel Works.

G'wan! G'wan Home! You Can't Play Here in Them Shorts!

SIX LITTLE GIRLIES, ALL IN SHORTS—BUT THEY CAN'T PLAY TENNIS ON THE CITY COURTS 'CAUSE THIS ATTENDANT JUST WON'T ALLOW THEM

The scene on the city tennis courts in Schenley Park as this attendant shooed away six little Squirrel Hill girls—because they were wearing shorts. It would seem that he hadn't heard that Safety Director A. Marshall Bell had said it was all right with his department if the ladies and girls wear 'em. The girls: DeVera Syna, 13, 2317 Pittock street; Rena, 8; Feola, 13; Lois, 10 and DeVera Perlman, 14, 5901 Phillips avenue; Rena Rosenberg, 13, 5920 Phillips avenue. This is a Sun-Telegraph picture.

15-CENT RATE DEMANDED OF COACH FIRM

Mayor Claims Legal Power; Gives Line 2 Weeks to Act

Claiming the right under an act of assembly to regulate bus operation in Pittsburgh, Mayor William N. McNair today notified the Pittsburgh Motor Coach Company to reduce the fare on its Highland Park route from 25 to 15 cents.

In a letter to the company, the Mayor gave the company until August 15 to put the reduction into effect. Mayor McNair said that an act of the Assembly of June, 1915, gives him the right to regulate bus operation.

The Mayor also announced that a Public Service Commission hearing would be held tomorrow on his recent order to the Bamford Brothers Bus Company of Whitaker, to modify their bus route into the city.

He wrote to the company several weeks ago and suggested an alternate route during the reconstruction of a portion of the Boulevard of the Allies. A few days ago he received word from the commission that no changes could be made without the commission's authority and that a hearing would be held.

Commenting on the changes suggested by him, the Mayor said:

"My action is for the people and of course I know the Public Service Commission will be for the people. So why bother with them?"

TRACTION POST FOR DENNY

Harmar D. Denny, Jr., former safety director, is the next choice of Mayor William N. McNair for the position of chairman of the Traction Conference Board. This became known today when the Mayor said he had instructed Safety Director A. Marshal Bell to offer the position to Denny.

Bell, the Mayor said, would try to reach Denny by telephone at Muncy, Pa., where the former safety Director is spending a vacation.

McNair was asked whether he would suggest Denny's name to Council.

He replied:

"Bell is going to call him today and let me know if he will accept."

In his office this morning the Mayor was overheard in remark that he believed City Council was about to weaken in his fight to have someone of his choice to replace Charles A. Finley, the present chairman of the Traction Conference Board. He further added he felt there was now a chance to have someone of his choice replace Finley.

Child's Heart Broken Over Missing Cat

MARIE AND HER EX-PETS

Broken-hearted because one of the pet kittens she adopted disappeared during her absence from home, Leatrice Lewis, 6, of New York, is under the doctor's care today.

The little girl made a special trip here to take her two pet cats, Rosie and Amos home to live. She had left them with a friend in Dormont while she and her family found a home in New York.

Leatrice was given the pets 10 months ago by Marie Kwit, 6, of 4419 Butler street, because her family couldn't afford to keep them.

M'NAIR IGNORES SHORTS BAN

Believing, he says, that the city needs a lot more harmony, Mayor McNair will not interfere with park officials who banned six girls from the Schenley Park tennis courts because they were playing in shorts.

When asked if he would revoke the ban against shorts, the Mayor said:

"What we need in this city is more domestic tranquility, so I don't argue with anybody. I let them run their own affairs."

The six girls were ordered from the courts yesterday by a park employe who declared, the girls said, that he was carrying out the orders of Ralph E. Griswold, superintendent of parks.

CHIROPRACTORS PLAN RESEARCH

Sessions of the National Chiropractic Association, meeting in the Hotel William Penn, continued today with clinics and a dinner-dance scheduled for tonight.

Plans for a national research group to consolidate the separate research activities of the association's members was advanced at a symposium yesterday by Dr. W. H. Lynse, of Batavia, Ill. Dr. Lynse asserted that mechanization of life within the last 30 years has radically changed the problems of health control.

Dr. L. M. Rogers, executive secretary of the organization, assailed "medical lobbyists," charging that medical men had prevented the chiropractors from securing a separate board of examiners to license them in Pennsylvania.

Boy Disappears Going to Funeral

Police today were again searching for William Kinzek, 13, of 306 Spalding avenue, Aliquippa, who disappeared from a train en route to his home from Detroit in time for his father's funeral yesterday. Railroad officials believed he left the train between Toledo and Cleveland.

The boy's mother requested police to search for her son when his father, Michael Kinzek, 46, died Sunday. Detroit police found the boy Tuesday and placed him on a train for his home that night. He was to be at the funeral yesterday, but did not arrive, police reported.

Man Hurt By Auto, Driver Arrested

John Barrett, 55, of 268 Thirty-eighth street, was recovering in the St. Francis Hospital today of a probable skul fracture and injuries to his arms, sustained when he was hit by an auto while crossing Butler street, near Fortieth street. Max Stumps, Jr., 29, alleged driver, of R. F. D., Sharpsburg, was arrested.

THREAT OF DEATH IDLES HAND OF KANE

JOHN KANE'S UNFINISHED PAINTING: FOUR TRAINS

WORRIED MRS. KANE

Unsigned Painting May Be Noted Artist's Last

A canvas to be displayed at the International Exhibition of Paintings in October today hangs in a humble two-room home at 2,700 Fifth avenue.

On a bed nearby lies its creator, John Kane, 74, with death hovering over his thin, emaciated body.

For months his hand has not touched a brush. Sickness has reduced his once powerful frame to a shadow of its former figure.

Helpless in the throes of a wasting disease, the bedfast artist longs for strength enough to finish his latest work—in his opinion the best of his brief but brilliant career.

Hours spent alongside his easel at a spot on the top of Herron Hill resulted in a vivid panorama of the modern Pittsburgh scene. The canvas was almost completed when his illness set in, but today it remains unvarnished and unsigned.

Much of his time during the past year was spent working on the painting, according to Mrs. Margaret Kane, who is her husband's nurse and has gone without sleep several days tending to him in his helplessness.

The stricken artist is at times delirious. Mrs. Kane said that recently, after making out a check, she asked her husband to sign it.

Taking the pen, the stricken man drew it over the check as though he were about to begin sketching a portrait, and then weakly dropped it on the bed cover.

The check was for a small sum, for money is scarce in the second floor home. Though fame flashed its spotlight on the artist several years ago, fortune did not follow.

For a time he thought of returning to the steadier business of painting houses, but there was little market for his talents there so he remained at his easel.

The praise of the critics was gratifying, but it will not pay the bill he received from Mercy Hospital for the care he got there before he was returned to his home.

He has been given the last rites of the church by a priest from Epiphany parish where he attended mass daily.

ASKS HIGH BOND IN GARBAGE SUIT

North Side incinerator opponents faced the possibility today that extra funds will have to be raised in their proposed court action if the city demands a bond to cover any possible loss.

City Solicitor Cornelius D. Scully announced that if the opponents seek an injunction to prevent construction of the Manchester plant, the bond will be asked. He pointed out that the city is paying $100 a day interest on the incinerator bonds, in addition to anticipated savings which would be lost through a delay in construction if the court action failed.

This condition was cited as the basis upon which the amount of the bond will be determined, and he indicated a substantial amount will be asked.

Swissvale Scouts Plan Street Dance

Boy Scouts Troop No. 3 of Swissvale will hold a street dance and bazaar at Commercial and Whipple streets, North Homestead, tomorrow and Saturday nights. Proceeds will be used to finance camping trips and to purchase new equipment for the troop.

The Swissvale Scouts recently completed a trail through the woods adjacent to Frick Park, and have played a prominent part in tree planting work throughout the district.

Tenant Held On Bad Check Charge

Harry Gallagher, alia: James Pearson, was held for hearing today by West End police for passing worthless checks.

It is alleged that Gallagher gave his landlord, Albert Watson, a check for $75 for his rent. He received $25 change from Watson. The check came back from a North Side bank and Watson reported the case to police.

MINER CARVES OWN FIDDLE

ANTHONY McGREVIN . . HE CARVED HIS VIOLIN

Rare Wood Used in Violin

Violin or pick-handle, it's all the same to Anthony McGrevin, of Grove road, Castle Shannon, a miner for the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Corporation, who likes to carve.

Work was slack at the mine about a year ago and he had some rare old wood on hand — spruce and maple 90 years old, given him by a friend.

One day a neighbor showed him a violin. McGrevin decided to carve one like it. Working with what tools he had handy, knife and broken glass, he shaped and scraped the wood, glued it together.

The result is a violin that musicians say has a tone as true as "store-bought" instruments. He can't play himself, but he plans to learn now if he can get the lessons free.

McGrevin also cuts his own pick and ax handles out of locust posts.

CITY RAZES 'SHANTYTOWN' IN STRIP

Old Brick Furnaces, Home for Jobless, Resits Dynamite

"Cellartown," at Twenty-ninth and Smallman streets, is a level lot today, the old brick furnaces that sheltered 175 homeless men through several years of depression caved in by dynamite.

City Health Department workmen, under the direction of Lee T. Sellers, supervisor of the city's slum clearance program, dynamited the brick caves yesterday to prevent their unhealthful use as homes again.

The site, the abandoned ruins of a Carnegie Steel Company mill, contained the homes of about 175 men, Sellers estimates, until the City Health Department issued an order to vacate about 10 days ago.

Sellers' crew was on the job yesterday. Wooden houses were burned, but the old brick furnaces, baked hard by the fierce fires needed to melt steel, resisted even dynamite. A dozen sticks only cracked the walls at times.

VIENNA STIRRED BY DEATH OF HINDENBURG

VIENNA, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—The death of President von Hindenburg of Germany created a sensation in the Austrian capital today.

Newspapers printed extras. Crowds eagerly grabbed them up and stopped in the street to read the news. The stories were brief.

The first bulletin issued by the Austrian official news agency read:

"President von Hindenburg has entered eternity."

The Telegraf printed the first editorial comment, saying:

"The most fateful action of von Hindenburg in his long career, however, was his appointment of Hitler to the chancellorship, a step which the aging President took upon the recommendation of von Papen."

It is Franz von Papen whom Hitler has recommended as special envoy to Austria.

Meanwhile another member of the Nazi putsch, which brought death to Chancellor Dollfuss last week, was sentenced to life imprisonment after conviction for high treason.

He is Paul Hudl, 41, former officer in the Austrian Army, twice wounded and five times decorated for bravery in the World War.

Austria's Fascist government kept an attentive ear toward Fascist Italy today, but allowed no interruption of its campaign against Nazis.

Confirmation was lacking of reports Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg and Vice Chancellor Ernst von Starhemberg would visit Premier Mussolini, god-father of their rule, shortly.

LINCOLN DEATH RELIC FOUND

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—One more Abraham Lincoln relic is to be placed in the old Ford Theater, where he was shot.

It is a blood-stained card marked "reserved." It is said to have been attached to a chair in the box where the tragedy occurred.

Elnathan Meade, doorkeeper of the President's gallery in the House of Representatives, has sworn to the circumstances of its discovery. He was with a company of soldiers dispatched to the theater after the assassination.

Another soldier, William H. Smith, who afterwards lived in Potter, N. Y., is said to have picked up the card from beside Lincoln's chair. He gave it to Meade, who found it recently in a box of old letters.

Hooversville Fights Infantile Paralysis

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Following the death of one victim of infantile paralysis, health authorities at Hooversville are taking steps to prevent a spread of the disease.

Eight-year-old Ruth E. Sevits, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Webster Sevits, of near Hooversville, succumbed late yesterday after a week's illness. Two other child victims of the disease are in a serious condition.

Unconscious Man Found in Street

If you or you or you want to reserve a date for a wedding, a debut, a benefit, a play, a bit of warning—the dates are going fast!

All of which rush for fall dates indicates a busy, exciting season in Pittsburgh social realms.

The latest date to be reserved is Thursday, October 25. That night is now the "property" of the Sewickley Cot Club.

On that evening the Club will present its annual play in the Edgeworth Club, according to Mrs. DeWitt B. Nettleton, who will do publicity for the Cot Club this season.

Not only the actors in the play will be Sewickleyites, but the playwright as well—she's Mrs. Newton Chapin who has had plays produced in the East, and one at least on Broadway.

Mrs. George Phelps Rose Founder And Honorary President of Club

The E. C. Bothwells and their daughter, Leonora, of Edgewood, arrived at Lido Beach Tuesday to spend a week as the guests of Mrs. Russell P. L. Sullivan, at Lido Beach.

Mrs. George Faber Downey, Jr., Long Island Bridge Tournament

Attending the bridge tournament at the Southampton Riding and Hunt Club, Southampton, L. I., Tuesday night were Mrs. George Faber Downey, Jr., of Sewickley, and her mother, Mrs. Edward Van Ingen, of New York.

On the list of judges for hunters and jumpers at Southampton's annual horse show August 11 is the name of Pittsburgher Richard King Mellon.

At this show two classes will be judged at once—something rather unusual. At dog shows judging goes on in three or four or even more judging tents, but at horse shows only one class is being judged at the same time usually.

In the large gallery Tuesday afternoon at the annual invitation tennis tournament at the Meadow Club, Southampton, were Virginia Thaw, frequent Pittsburgh visitor, granddaughter of Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., of the East End and Sewickley Heights, and Mary and Jane Mellon, daughters of the Edward Purcell Mellons, of New York, related to the Pittsburgh Mellons.

Of interest in this district is the engagement of Grace Tumulty, daughter of the late President Wilson's private secretary, and Dr. Philip A. Caulfield, son of Philip E. Caulfield and the late Mrs. Caulfield, of Johnstown, Pa.

The Joseph T. Tumultys, of Washington, made known the betrothal in the capital city.

The bride-to-be attended the Georgetown convent, and the King-Smith School in Washington.

Dr. Caulfield was graduated from Mount St. Mary's College in Emmittsburg, Md., and from Georgetown University in 1929. He is clinical instructor of surgery in the Medical School of Georgetown University.

The wedding's to take place at Sea Girt, N. J., where the Burnetts have their summer home, Saturday night at 6:30 o'clock.

Going with the Johnstons were their son, William Wallace Johnston, who'll be his brother's best man; Alan M. Davies, who'll be an usher, and Robert Bright.

After the wedding and the reception, Mr. Johnston and his bride will go to New York and Atlantic City. And later they'll start south—they'll live near Jacksonville, Fla.

SUNNY DAY, SUNNY LAWN, SUNNY SMILE IN BERMUDA

MISS MARY THORNE WHITE, THE J. C. WHITES' DAUGHTER OF MELVILLE LANE, SEWICKLEY, AT ELBOW BEACH, BERMUDA, DURING MID-SUMMER VISIT

Patterson Nuptials Held

The unusual gowning of the bride and her attendants—they all wore white satin—made a particularly effective wedding last night when Miss Vera Georgia Patterson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Guy Patterson, became Mrs. Lewis Russell Mills, in her parents' home, Race street, Edgewood.

The bridal gown was of ivory satin made with a high-neck line and a lace yoke. The puffed sleeves were tight at the wrist and her lace veil, in halo effect, was caught with orange blossoms. She carried a shower of lilies of the valley and gardenias.

Her attendants were gowned alike in white satin, except for a wide additional train, which cascaded from a huge flower at the waist line. The gown worn by Mrs. Lynn D. Sprankle, who was her sister's matron of honor, had a geranium red flower and train. That of Miss Kathleen Pershing, of Greesburg, the maid of honor, was of blue and the bridesmaid, Miss Margaret Moore, had yellow.

Even the little flower girl, Eleanor Endslow, wore a frock of the same material and pattern. Each carried asters to match the color of her cascade. The ring bearer, Kerr Endslow, Jr., was in white linen.

Mr. Mills, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Clive A. Mills, of Portland, Ore., had Blair K. Patterson as best man and Lynn D. Sprankle and Joseph G. Moyer, of Pittsburgh, Alfred M. Battistini, of Hartford, Conn., and John J. DeVillars, of Oakdale, as ushers.

The Rev. Walter L. Moser, pastor of the Edgewood Presbyterian Church, performed the ceremony and Miss Ruth Tonkin, pianist, played the wedding music.

Ruth Liberman Married in Oakland

A small, but distinctive, summer wedding was solemnized on Sunday, when Miss Ruth Eleanor Liberman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Liberman, of Carson street, became the bride of Jerome Supowitz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Supowitz, of Marlboro avenue. Rabbi Joseph Shapiro officiated.

The ceremony was performed at 6 o'clock in the French room of the Hotel Schenley under an improvised altar of cibotium ferns, boston ferns, and bamboos.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, appeared in a gown of tearose mousseline de soie and matching accessories. She carried a bouquet of tearoses and blue delphiniums.

Mrs. Liberman, mother of the bride, was gowned in brown lace. Her corsage was of talisman roses. Mrs. Supowitz, mother of the bridegroom, wore a black chiffon gown, and a corsage of American beauty roses.

Mrs. Edward Lenchner played the bridal march and Miss Gertrude Grossman sang "Because" and "I Love You Truly."

A dinner for the immediate members of the family supplemented the ceremony.

Following a wedding trip to Atlantic City, Mr. Supowitz and his bride will be at home in the Marlboro Apartments.

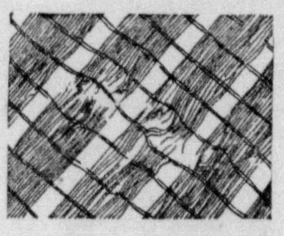
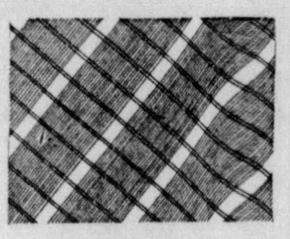
Silver Dust Washes Clothes
QUICKER and EASIER

New discoveries* prove long soaking unnecessary when proper soap is used!



When clothes are soaked too long (even in plain water) fabrics weaken. The fabric gives away at points of wear. Holes like these develop.

With Silver Dust you only need to soak clothes 20 minutes. Clothes wash quicker. Fabrics last longer. Colors stay brighter.



IMPORTANT scientific discoveries reveal that soaking clothes overnight, even in plain water, weakens fabrics and makes clothes wear out before their time. Therefore, it is important to use a soap that does the work quickly and thoroughly, yet so gently that it will be kind to even the most delicate fabrics.

Recent tests prove that Silver Dust is one soap that does all of these things. Its instant suds mean quicker and more thorough action. After twenty minutes soaking in Silver Dust suds, clothes can be washed in no time. Just as Silver Dust showed the way to quicker and easier dish washing, it is now making laundry work quicker, easier and safer than ever before.

MAKES COLORS BRIGHTER TOO

Another discovery that has startled women everywhere is the fact that Silver Dust actually makes colors brighter than new, even after repeated washings. Anything that is washable, you can safely trust to Silver Dust.

★IMPORTANT NOTICE

So recent are these discoveries about soaking that we have not yet had the opportunity to change the directions on our package which suggest overnight soaking. However, our tests have proved that with Silver Dust, 20-minute soaking is enough.

DISH TOWELS AND SILK STOCKINGS GIVEN AWAY FOR BOX TOPS

Remember that for every four Silver Dust box tops you send us, we will mail you a big 18 x 36 inch dish towel. Or, for twenty box tops we will send you a pair of sheer silk, full-fashioned hose in the latest and most fashionable shade. Send the tops to Silver Dust, 88 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

TWEEDS FOR A TANG IN THE AIR

By PRUNELLA WOOD

IN SPITE of all temptation, our British cousins remain Englishmen when it comes to fashion and food. At that, they have something to offer in their extreme nationalism, and there is many a demned foreigner who is buying British all over the globe, just because she adores English woolens and their tailoring.

THE SOFTNESS of English tailoring is one of its high aspots. In cut, color and fabric, your Anglian wool outfit needs only tip to be worn with a negligent air to be very feminine but swank withal. Such lovely tones as hyacinth, sulphur, peach, violet and pale pink are just as inspirational to them as are the heather mixtures and the stalwart navy blues and grays.

The woman who intends to summer at one of the very smart resorts in the tamarack countries should look into suits, odd skirts and jumpers, top coats and shirtwaist frocks developed in these pastel materials.

In these parts mentioned, it is a sizzler of a day when one can walk out at high noon without a sweater, and a night without the joys of an open fireplace would be Siberian in desolation. Dark clothes are not the thing at all. The giddy, feminine togs that we see during the cold spells at Florida resorts in midwinter are the sort of things that go over big and warm in Canadian summer places.

(Copyright, 1934, King Features Synd., Inc.)

This coat is a luscious shade of raspberry-and-cream Shetland wool, soft as a kitten, and the fox collar laid over the cloth revet collar is white fur dyed to match the tweed. The model is lightweight, but warm, and is lined with pink crepe. The costume sketched center is a "windbreaker" and skirt of copper linen, worn with a turquoise zephyr pullover.

Right, a sulphur cashmere jacket and skirt with round patch pockets and unpressed lapels. The pullover and the knitted pillbox cap match the suit exactly, in light yarn.

THROUGH THE SPYGLASS

Viewing the New

You little shoppers who want to learn the names of the shops whose items are listed in this column day by day . . . call GRANT 6500 . . . and ASK FOR THE SPYGLASS. Or send in a stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply. THE SPYGLASS is always on the alert, peering out new "finds" . . . and you will be answered promptly!

Here we go 'round the mulberry bush . . . hung with bargains, and clearances, and all sorts of things for you and for us. One of the foremost of the tempters being the sweeping clearance that one of the stores is having!

A clearance that will open your eyes . . . even though you may have been to clearances before this! A clearance that will all but make history 'mongst the gladsome garner-ers like you that know a good thing when you see it: A clearance of $3.98 and $5.98 frocks and suits now for $2.65.

Most of them are $5.98 values . . . which, to begin with is sumpin'. And they include every type of summer fabric from linens to voiles, seersuckers to silks and back again! Washable! Wearable! Practical! One-up to five-of-a-kind models! All colorings and color combinations! Types for everyone! Just what we and you other females will need to eke out our wardrobes as we trek vacation-ward or sit in the back yard. Not all sizes in every style, naturally . . . but droves of them that you'll be sure to find something you like.

And in one and the same breath . . . we yelp a bit about the new fall boucles that we've seen at $12.95. Boucles in grand deep fall shades . . . that use unusual bits to trim themselves . . . that have queerish little touches to make them different—like a pert ruffle around the neck, fastening at the side . . . or wooden buttons, buttoning smack all the way down the front! And lacey weaves . . . or dropstitch designs . . . the sort that will be incomparable to wear right now and as we go into the fall. Sizes 14 to 20 . . . 36 to 44.

And next a 10-piece dining room suite that is to sing a swan song for $195. Which same sum is approximately 40 per cent under market price (we're told). Of Jacobean design . . . very swank . . . in walnut . . . that oughta-be $395 if a thin dime. You know . . . to-the-jumping-off-place with-profit . . . that sorta thing! And after all, if THEY can do it . . . who are you and I to get up on our high horses and start a series of questions?

—DOROTHY RANDALL.

Beaver Falls Programs Listed

Another year book—that of the Beaver Falls Outlook Club—has been added to the steadily growing collection in the club editor's desk. And this latest addition is filled with promise of a variety and richness of program fare.

Mrs. Jesse E. Martsolf, who continues in the office of president for another year, will be honored at the opening meeting, which is to be a luncheon at the Beaver Valley Country Club with the past presidents of the Outlook as hostesses. Federation Day comes in October, too, and "[illegible]" centers around Beaver Associated Artists and another on "Customs of Mankind."

Louis E. Graham, former United States attorney, will discuss "Law Enforcement" at the last of the three November meetings and after that comes the Christmas program, the only one listed for December. The drama committee will have charge of the program for the annual meeting in January. Mrs. John A. Elliott is to build her talk for January 25 around "The American Home" and in February Miss Esther Smith will talk on "School Legislation."

Beaver Falls Juniors will present an evening program for the club in February when teachers in the public schools will be guests. A book review by Dr. O. L. Reed, an afternoon devoted to "McGuffey, a Noted Educator," a sealed program, a health talk by Dr. A. R. Laird and a history of Beaver County by W. O. Lambert, together with the music and social committees' program on the closing day, will conclude the year's plans.

In her official family Mrs. Martsolf will have Mrs. Charles N. Ramsey and Miss Mary V. McHattie, as vice presidents; Mrs. C. R. Sadler and Mrs. Frank C. Perrott, as recording and corresponding secretaries, and Mrs. H. B. Plummer, as treasurer. Mrs. Robert M. Patterson and Miss Mary Brierly are trustees.

VISITOR

Mrs. Johnston Arranges for Musicale

The affair which Mrs. Chester F. Johnston will give as her contribution to the Congress of Clubs' summer series is to be a musicale next Tuesday afternoon and will take place in Mrs. Robert F. Hartley's home in Shady avenue. The program will be presented by Mrs. Raymer L. Mowry, reader; Mrs. Marjorie Evans Stewart, soprano, with Miss Eleanor Lally accompanying, and Miss Irene McKlinsky, piano.

As aides that afternoon Mrs. Johnston will have Mrs. Harold S. Haller, Miss Frances Haller, Mrs. William S. Tate, Miss Louise A. Johnston and Mrs. Robert S. Congdon.

Century Lecturers Named

MRS. CHARLES M. HEGG

The lecture season at the Twentieth Century Club will begin Monday morning, November 5, and will be preceded on November 1 by the president's reception honoring the new executive head, Mrs. William P. Wilkerson.

Lecturers who have been engaged for the season include Stephen Leacock, the author; H. V. Kaltenborn, radio commentator who paid two visits to the club last season; Vera Brittain, who will have "A Personal Confession of Faith" as her subject; Lighton Rollins, who is to describe "The Current Season in New York," Eunice Harriet Avery and Edward Weeks, who will discuss "The Importance of New Books."

Branson DeCou still being his "dream pictures" for an illustrated lecture; Pittsburgh's Dr. Andrey Avinoff, of Carnegie Museum, will speak before the club on "Persian Art" and Lt. Col. Stewart Roddie will talk on "Racial Types." B. K. Ratcliffe, English lecturer, is coming back again and Paul Wilstach, author and lecturer and brother of the late Frank Wilstach of "simile" fame, is to give an illustrated lecture on "Tide-water Virginia."

A new name to Twentieth Century audiences is that of P. A. Mitchell Hedges, whose topic is announced as "The Lost World" and George Sokolsky, who made such a deep impression on the occasion of his last visit to the club, is to come again for a current events talk. Joseph Auslander will tell "What Poetry Can Do For You" and the Rt. Rev. Cyril Allington will state "The Object of Education."

Beatrice Forbes-Robertson Hale, always a delightful speaker, is engaged for discussion of "The Latest English Fiction." No doubt many of the club members will be disappointed that Prof. William Starr Myers, of Princeton, is listed for only one of his popular current events lectures. Another current events talk will be given by Ernest Gruening.

At the Temple Israel in New York City, the marriage of Miss Leona Manette, sister of Mrs. C. A. Rombach, of Malvern avenue, Squirrel Hill, and Jacob H. Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe spent their honeymoon in Atlantic City and New York, and are temporarily at home in Murray avenue, Squirrel Hill.

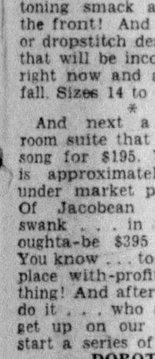
Contract Bridge

HOW TO PLAY and HOW TO WIN

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

A Clever End Play

"The bid was wrong;" "The lead was bad;" "It was luck;" "West did not make a good defensive play."—These are only a few of the remarks that follow the bidding and play of hands at the Bridge table. Difference of opinion, if not the life-blood of Bridge, adds much to its infinite variety and vastly increases its appeal. It is true there are standards laid down to govern the bidding and these should generally be followed, but the fact that a player fails to adhere in every particular to rules is always bad. To bid soundly it is essential to understand the principles upon which the rules are based.



Mrs. Culbertson

From Andre E. Levy, of Mexico City, I have received a description of a hand played in the beautiful capital of our neighbor to the South. Mr. Levy was the Dealer in the first hand of the rubber, and this lovely vista met his eyes:

♠AK7 ♡AKQJ ◇A10 ♣AKQ2

He decided there were too many honor-tricks to count and that a Forcing bid would result in a no-trump contract to be played by his partner. Even though he had full confidence in his partner's playing, he determined not to take two bites of a cherry but to bid for a Small Slam in notrump at once. His reasoning may not have been good—in fact, I think he was wrong—but this is the story of an actual discussion of sound bidding. West opened the nine of hearts, and Mr. Levy's partner, when laying down the Dummy, remarked:

"Well, anyway I am giving you one-half honor-trick."

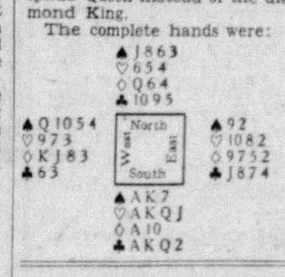
These were his cards:

♠J863 ♡654 ◇Q64 ♣1095

When Mr. Levy completed his survey of the Dummy he realized he had his work cut out for him if he was to fulfill his contract, but he reasoned that it might be possible if the Queen of spades and the diamond King happened to be in the same hand. Winning the Opening lead, which was a heart, he laid down the Ace and King of clubs, hoping to drop the Jack. When this failed, he led two rounds of hearts, and both West and East followed suit. The fourth heart was then led, upon which both West and East discarded diamonds and the club Ten was discarded from Dummy. The cards now remaining in the North and South hands were:

The next play was the lead of the Queen of clubs, upon which West discarded the eight of diamonds. After carefully studying the cards Mr. Levy now decided that West must have held four diamonds, probably to the King, and four spades to the Queen, and that the reason he had opened his three-card suit was his unwillingness to lead into a possible tenace. Acting on this assumption, he discarded a spade from Dummy, laid down the Ace of diamonds, and followed with another diamond, forcing West to win and lead up to the spade tenace. Had West discarded a spade, all of Dummy's spades could have been retained, and the end-play still made by throwing West into the lead with the spade Queen instead of the diamond King.

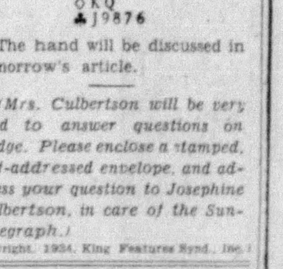
The complete hands were:



Tomorrow's Hand

East, Dealer.

Neither side vulnerable; East-West part-score 40.



The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

(Mrs. Culbertson will be very glad to answer questions on bridge. Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope, and address your question to Josephine Culbertson, in care of the Sun-Telegraph.)

Walter Winchell ON BROADWAY

Lines in Defense of Lip Sticky Gals

Lipstick on the cups and spoons!
Shocking . . . Walter! What a prude
You're really turning out to be:
That anyone could be so rude
To lovely ladies, who but try
To knock their escorts for a loop
With scarlet lips indelible (?)
While lapping up their gin or soup . . .

I fancy this makes up the blister;
Lipstick on your kerchiefs, mister?

We Found That Out

Olin Miller, no kin to the famous Joe, observes that the best way to fool a person is to let him believe he is fooling you.

Then She Hung Up

The former husband of a woman who married one of the Marcus Loew tribe took advantage of her husband's absence from the city to telephone her.

"Hello," he began. "Is this Mrs. Loew?"

She replied that she was—and before she could ask him his name, he said:

"Tell me something. What's playing at Loew's Orpheum this week?"

Novelette

This one should have made the newspapers, but it didn't. A businessman was convicted of income tax evasion a few years ago. He was sent to a federal hoosegow, where he met a burglar. They were thrown together a lot in the jail and grew to like each other.

Not long after his release, the businessman died. His will bequeathed over two million dollars to the buddy, since freed—and the will also instructed that he be taken into the firm!

Quiteso, Quiteso

Sammy Watkins writes that the new deal in the movie industry will be a good thing if films that have three reels' worth of action would be confined to three reels!

You Don't Say!

For a classic in understatement, one that Mr. Woollcott would cherish, we recommend the comment of Police Comm. Allman, of Chicago. When newspapermen wanted to know what he thought of the spectacular Dillinger killing, he yawned:

"Oh, I should call it a pretty good job."

The Squelch Proper

Al and Lee Reiser, the pianists, recall the time a critic met a young actress, whom he had just roasted in a review of a new play.

"Oh," she'd oh'd, "how could you say such things about me? Don't you realize how sensitive I must be about my first important role?"

"My dear," said the actor-murderer, "you are more sensitive than you have a right to be."

Haw!

Max Baer, the heavy champ, was at an affair the other evening where he was introduced to Isabel Sloan, the owner of Cavalcade, the racehorse.

Upon which Maxie made the delicious crack:

Incidentally

Baer was saying in the papers that life is no bed of roses, when you're champion. Mebbe not, but he might consider his luck better than another champion's—Willard, who got the throne by polishing off Jack Johnson.

Jess Willard only recently defended himself in his 776th lawsuit since inheriting the crown. Most of which were filed since losing his glory.

Gosh, Yes!

One Hollywood star has a portrait gallery, including all the presidents. There was a hilarious party there the other week-end, and an argument developed. The host threatened to drape a picture over the head of a guest if he didn't get out.

"Okay, okay," pleaded the slightly saturated one, "jus' s' long as you don't hit me with Taft."

Of All Things!

The news wires services report that in Mineola, New York, the late William Finger's will was the subject for the courts. It was argued that Mr. Finger used to bathe in the nude in a horse trough in front of his home—afterwards running a mile down the road to visit Julia Freund, now his widow.

Surrogate Leone D. Howell directed a jury to uphold the will, holding nude bathing was not a sign of an unsound mind.

For which hurray! If Mr. Finger had worn a full dress suit or even overalls for his bathing there might have been some question of his sanity.

No Audience Chaser

And Sidney Blackmer, one of the neater story tellers, relays the one about the author who was told by the movie powers that his story was too talky.

"It's got too much gab," one said, "there is no movement to it;"

His retort courteous was:

"No—not for the feet!"

Try Again Gag Good To Stars

By JIMMY STARR

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 2.—Hello! "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." It's an old wheeze, but it still works—in the movie village. Not more than a baker's dozen among all the stars and featured players now in pictures succeeded in their first efforts to "crash the movies."

Most of them had to try at least twice. Many of them weathered a dozen disappointments of one kind or another before they finally won their chance before the cameras.

Let's make a quick survey of a few incidents—

Barbara Stanwyck lost her first chance to click with a test of the crying scene from "Burlesque" because Ruth Chatterton was in the small studio audience. What Ruth said about Barbara is known to but two others. Barbara didn't get her second chance until much later.

Clark Gable's first chance was as a villain at Pathe in a Bill Boyd western picture. Warners then turned down a chance to sign Clark at $100 per week.

George Brent, backed by Gilda Gray, finally landed a bit actor's ticket at Universal and appeared in one serial and was dismissed. He accidentally wandered into the Warner Studio the day Ruth Chatterton wanted a leading man. He made the test—and you know the rest.

Al Jolson bought up his first contract with D. W. Griffith and paid back the money already spent on production. He wanted to do the same thing with "The Jazz Singer," but was finally talked out of the idea by Darryl Zanuck.

Warren William first entered the films with the Pearl White serials. It was many years later that he finally got his break as a leading man.

William Powell was a villian with a stock company in Seattle, and was finally dismissed for "bad acting." He came to Hollywood as a last resort—and see what happened.

Paul Muni's first try at the flickers resulted in "Seven Faces" for Fox, which, so many claim, holds a record. Muni is the only actor to be "bad seven times in one picture." Many of his tests for "Scarface," which later won him fame, were so poor that even eccentric, money-tossing-away Howard Hughes didn't like them.

If these men and women had been easily discouraged they would most certainly not be reigning favorites of the screen today. They followed the time worn bromide and "tried again—and again—and again."

Gracie Allen postcards from London—"Say, I think Paramount was wrong to sign up Joe Penner. He isn't worth anything. Why, everybody's always saying, "A Penner for your thoughts."

Just thingamuhjigs . . . Universal is planning on remaking "A Lady of Quality" ('Twas filmed as a silent 11 years ago), with Margaret Sullivan in the top spot . . . Geneva Mitchell, Lowell Sherman's honeybunch, gets a role in "Night Life of the Gods" which he is directing for Universal . . . Worthington Minor is headed back to Broadway to put on a play . . . Jack Mulhall is slated to star in four shorties for RKO—and that's another boost in the right direction for this swell guy's comeback to pictures . . . Incidentally, Viola Dana's back in town from Denver, where hubby is a golf pro, and she has a yen to again don the grease paint . . . B. P. Schulberg, who buys and shelves more stories than he produces, just put "St. Nick," a new yarn of a modern Santa Claus, on ice for the time being.

All the way from Deah Ole London comes an interesting letter from Laura La Plante, recently wedded to Irving Asher, Warner studio exec. It reads in part (now you can say you've been reading My mail)—

Alice Faye Takes Shearer Home

The Hollywood hillside home which Norma Shearer lived in last has become Alice Faye's residence. The Fox star recently returned after a vacation in Maine and New York.

Joan in a Study

JOAN CRAWFORD, NEXT FILM "CHAINED," IN POSE ARTISTS CALL A STUDY

Your Theater and Mine :-: By KARL KRUG

THE LOBBY PHILOSOPHER

It's the finest news in many a long and doleful day . . . that is, that George M. Cohan, the nation's First Actor, is to make a talking picture of "Gambling"... He has had a film version of it in mind for a long time, and the resumption of production on a fairly heavy scale in the East must have caused him to make up his mind . . . Cohan is so "mad" at Hollywood that he would never have gone there to do it . . . If you saw that taut, trim, two-fisted melodrama as it zip-zipped its tense way over the Nixon stage a few seasons ago you will never forget it . . . It had become the custom in certain quarters to howl down the "insides" of the acting business, melodrama, when Mr. Cohan came along in "Gambling" . . . But, Draper, the role played by the First Actor in "Gambling," mussed the coiffurs and creased the slick shirt fronts of all those audiences of representative Pittsburgh citizenry that flocked to the Nixon that week . . . Mr. Cohan combines more histrionics in flipping the ash off a cigaret or making a telephone call than most of the reigning stage and screen heroes get out of their systems in a season's work . . . I hope he gets Mary Phillips to play her original role of the hard-cracking, wise baby type of the Bright Light belt.

Frank Crumit, your old vaudeville and musical comedy favorite, is finding life easy to live these days . . . Not only is he one of radio's standouts, along with his lovely wife, Julia Sanderson, of course, but he recently had the thrill of realizing an ambition of many years' standing . . . Frank has reclaimed an estate of 240 acres near Columbus, O., which, long held by his family, had drifted to outside interests . . . Now Frank is having it improved and he and Julia are looking forward to a visit there at the end of the summer . . . Former musical comedy favorites, Frank and Julia have lived a musical comedy romance . . . Although Frank had written "Sweet Lady" before he met Julia, he was strumming it on a ukulele the first time he ever saw her . . . That was at a rehearsal of "Tangerine," in which they both played . . . Every night, and at matinees, from then on, Frank sang "Sweet Lady" to Julia . . . The end of the story being that he has been singing it to her, and with her, ever since . . . And I know how happy it will make Louis K. Sidney to hear that Kitty Carlisle has been cast in the lead opposite Bing Crosby in "Here Is My Heart" . . . Kitty more than fulfilled all of Lou's faith in her by her sparkling work in "She Loves Me Not."

We need more of the droll Lynne Overman, whose Regret role in "Little Miss Marker" is worth a second look of anyone's time . . . And we are to get it in Mark Hellinger's "Broadway Bill," in which Lynne is to have a part similar to the one in the Runyon tale . . . You may not know it, but Overman was the Christopher Columbus who unearthed two of the outstanding feminine personalities of the screen—the late Lilyan Tashman and Estelle Taylor . . . Lynne found them in the chorus of "Come On, Charlie," a musical in which he was starring, and gave them their first speaking lines on the stage . . . You have to hand it to B. P. Schulberg, former newspaperman turned screen producer, who is beating the European powers to the wire . . . Schulberg has a talking picture in work called "War Is Declared." . . . What could be nicer to look forward to than Eddie Cantor's revival of "Mandy" in his coming film, "Kid Millions"? . . . Not only will minstrelsy come to life once more in this sequence, but you will live again those happy days of the Ziegfeld "Follies" of 1919, with memories of Bert Williams and Van and Schenck . . . A bow to both Sam Goldwyn, the producer, and Cantor for this gesture of honor toward the departed Florenz Ziegfeld.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

"Her Master's Voice," to be presented by the Pittsburgh Civic Playhouse in the Arnold School Theater all next week, as the fourth subscription play of a series of six, is a comedy by Clare Kummer that achieved "success" ranking—and better—in New York last season. Measured in theatrical terms a success is a play that runs at least 100 performances. "Her Master's Voice" remained on Broadway for 222 shows, the first of which was on October 23, last. The original cast included Laura Hope Crews and Roland Young, who had been in Hollywood for quite a long time before Miss Kummer's comedy lured them back to the footlights. Perhaps Mr. Young considered the trip a filial duty since he is Mrs. Kummer's son-in-law. Anyway, both Mr. Young and Miss Crews had a nice long stay on the Great White Way in mother's funny play. It concerns a rich aunt who wants to bust up her niece's marriage because she has spent a fortune on her voice and does not want to have it wasted singing babies to sleep. * * *

"Stevedore," one of the hits of fag end of the New York season, will be produced in London in October with Paul Robeson in the leading role. . . . Sir Harry Lauder will be 64 Saturday, and he will celebrate by having a housewarming at his new home near Glasgow. . . . Max Gordon, who was the outstanding hit producer of New York last season, has been assured the support of the national head of the Stage Hands' Union in a Gordon plan to put shows on the road at $1 top. . . . Vaudeville in the combination houses next season likely will be as it has been locally—getting it when it comes—and if. . . . An English opera company, bearing the revered name of D' Oyley Carte, is coming to the U. S. A. for a tour in the fall. . . . San Francisco will have its own production of "Mary of Scotland," opening next Monday with Helen Gahagan, Ian Keith, Violet Kemble Cooper and Lionel Belmore as the better-known names in the cast. . . . The Broadway stage is down to its last four shows, a modern low, compared to six of a year ago. . . . Richard Bennett, who'll be in "The Red Cat" when it opens, told a London newspaper that he always encourages extras by telling them he rose from the ranks himself. . . . "Murder in Mayfair," new play by Ivor Novello, English playwright, which will open a pre-London tour in Glasgow next Monday, will have no trial scene, no policemen or detectives and the "murder," itself, will be only incidental. . . . If you want to see a tent rep company the Billroy comedians, in Butler today, will be in New Castle Friday and Ellwood City Saturday.

Another First-Run Film in Family

Hugh Williams, who made his motion picture debut before American screen audiences in the English-made talkie version of "Sorrell and Son," in which he made a favorable impression in the role of the grown Kit, is seen opposite Helen Twelvetrees in his first Hollywood film, "All Men Are Enemies," now having its initial Pittsburgh showings in the Family theater. Others in the cast of this dramatic romance, based on the novel by Richard Aldington, are Herbert Mundin, Henry Stephenson, Walter Byron, Mona Barrie, Matt Moore and Halliwell Hobbes. The story is an emotional one with a strong vein of comedy. "Carolina," with Janet Gaynor, Lionel Barrymore and Robert Young, is also on the Family's program.

Studio Secretary Named Writer

Disproving the idea that romance in business has become a missing factor, Miss A. Laurie Brazee, has been listed as the latest addition to the writing staff at Paramount studio. Miss Brazee has been secretary to Director Elliott Nugent for several years. She will prepare continuity for "Enter Madame," which Nugent will direct.

Odds and Ends

THE MAN was formerly a big shot in Hollywood. But as the years went by and the talkies rose to power, he lost everything he owned. And, as Harry Axst can tell you, he grew just a little daffy. Harmless, mind you, but still a trifle balmy.

For a year or two, he tried to make a living around the race tracks. A number of old friends staked him. But, as always, that came to an end before very long. And he found himself in New York last winter, broke and very unhappy.

He walked the streets for a few days—and then came a break. A bookmaker, operating one of the largest horse race poolrooms in the city, met the gentleman in question and offered him a job.

"All you have to do, Fred," said the bookie, "is to call the races as they come over the wire. You still have your voice, and the work is very easy. I can't pay you too much but, if you'll take $5 a day, the job is yours."

The Old Timer nodded sadly.

"I'll take it," he agreed. "because I have to. But I'm telling you right now that it breaks my heart. Once a great power in Hollywood; now a megaphone for horse races that I don't even see. Ah me!" . . .

For months, then, our friend handled his job in the poolroom. Seated at a desk, he would call the races in a high voice.

"Cavalcade in the lead," he would say. "Same at the quarter . . . same at the half . . ."

When his job was over for the day, he would wander about and complain bitterly of his lot in life. He didn't like Broadway; he didn't like anything. He was always going to quit—but the following afternoon would always find him at his desk and crying:

"Dark Winter in the lead . . . same at the quarter . . . same at the half . . ."

Thus the time has passed by. The Old Timer hasn't changed a bit. He's still grumbling, he's still balmy, and he's still calling the ponies for a living.

The other evening, as a friend passed, he saw the Old Timer leaning against the window of the drug store on Forty-seventh street and Broadway and gazing down Broadway. And he heard the man muttring.

"Broadway," he was saying. "What is it? . . . Tinsel . . . Trash . . . Bums . . . Fools . . . Idiots . . . Same at the quarter . . . Same at the half . . ."

"IT took great pains and labor, Mark," special deliveries Lee A. Cavallere, "but I've done it! After far too much brain work I have finally boiled down all the importants news of the last few months to one item.

"The item is that crime doesn't pay. And neither do France and England!"

THE trouble with the live wires of Broadway, points out Eddie Garr, is that they never seem to have any connections.

SOME years back, alarmed about his health, a famous Broadway character visited a doctor. The medico looked him over, shook his head sadly, told him he was a very sick man and gave him an armful of prescriptions. The Broadwayite went home and slowly tore the prescriptions to bits.

"I'm a great believer in exercise,' he told his friends, "and if I'm going to die, I'm going to die walking. I'm going to walk 10 or 15 miles a day from now on, and we'll see what happens."

A year later, after walking around the reservoir in Central Park three times daily, the Broadwayite had gained 30 pounds and was in perfect health. On one of these strolls, he met the doctor who had been so gloomy about his future. The two men shook hands, and the medico looked at his ex-patient in amazement.

"You look great, Steve," he said. "How the devil did you do it?"

"By walking," replied the Broadwayite. "And if you don't mind my telling you, I didn't take one of your prescriptions. Walking is my cure for all ailments."

The doctor looked around.

"I't mine, too," he whispered confidentially. "But for heaven's sake, don't tell anybody. We doctors have to making a living too!" . . .

AFRAID OF UGLY COSMETIC SKIN?

Not Now!

I'm removing cosmetics the Hollywood way—

How clever Ruth learned to prevent Choked Pores . . . to guard against COSMETIC SKIN

"FRANKLY, I do use quite a lot of cosmetics and I used to think I removed them thoroughly.

"But of course I don't want to run the risk of getting unattractive Cosmetic Skin. I don't want my pores choked up with stale cosmetics—making my skin coarse and dull, maybe causing little blemishes and even blackheads.

"Better not take chances! So I'm removing cosmetics thoroughly the Hollywood way—with Lux Toilet Soap. Every night, and before I put on fresh make-up during the day, I use this soap. You'd think me conceited if I told you the compliments I'm getting."

Cosmetics Harmless if removed this way

Use cosmetics, of course, but remove them thoroughly with Lux Toilet Soap! Its gentle lather is ACTIVE! Sinking deeply into tiny pores, it frees them from every trace of stale make-up, dust and dirt. Refreshes the skin—keeps it utterly lovely!

Loretta Young 20TH CENTURY STAR

FERRERA DETHRONED AS PUBLIC LINKS CHAMPION

JAMES J. LONG'S SPORTS COMMENT

Boston Slump Aids Bucs.
Money Chance Kept Alive.
Mishap Retards Mungo.
Headwork Ferrell Asset.
Flaws in Young Jockeys.
Hunk's Rap Called Alibi.

For the fact that they still have a chance to get back in the first division in spite of their long losing streak, the Pirates may thank the helpful turn of the baseball fates that caused the Braves to go into an extended slump at the same time. Only half a game behind the Bucs on the Fourth of July, the Bostonese would now be too far ahead to be overtaken easily if they had played average ball in the meanwhile. Far from taking advantage of the Pittsburgh slide and sewing up a money position, however, Bill McKechnie's club itself has skidded so badly that its gains on the Picaroons in four drab weeks have totaled only a game and a half and it's lead over the Freebooters today was just one box score.

Fred Frankhouse

During the period that saw the Rovers losing 20 of their last 28 games, the New Englanders have dropped 20 of their last 31 contests. Not even Fred Frankhouse can win for McKechnie now. After winning 13 of his first 15 games, Frankhouse has been beaten five times in his last six starts. Even in losing again to the lowly Reds yesterday, the Corsairs gained half a game on their fourth-place rivals, who spent the afternoon taking a double drubbing from the Giants.

FINGER INJURY SPOILS MUNGO'S BIG YEAR

July went out as the best month of the season for the Dodgers, from the angle that they won many more games than in May or June, and yet it was the worst month for their star pitcher, Van Lingle Mungo. Van was able to win earlier in the season, when the club was going poorly, but became a consistent loser when his mates hit their best stride. All because the big speed-ball ace tried to stick the middle finger of his pitching hand into a ball smashed back at him by Hughey Critz on July 7. Since that mishap, Mungo has not been able to apply his normal grip for fast ball pitching—and his control also has gone wrong.

Van's chance for a big season has been spoiled. He looked like the best pitcher of the year when he went into July with 12 victories to his credit and was picked to win from 20 to 25 games for the season. In his last four starts, however, he has won only a single decision.

FERRELL'S HEAD OFFSETS LOSS OF SPEED

There is no loud cheering in Cleveland these days when the fans take notice of the clip at which Wes Ferrell is turning in victories for the Red Sox. The pitcher whom the Indians sold as washed up after a protracted holdout has been one of the most consistent winners in the American League since he joined the Boston club. The shutout he pitched against the Senators the other day was his ninth triumph in 10 games, within two of the total number of decisions he won for Cleveland during all of last year.

Wes Ferrell

Around the Harridge circuit it is said that Wes no longer has the zip of a few seasons ago, when he won 91 games in four straight campaigns. But he is making up for the loss of his fast ball with a fair curve, excellent control and, above all, a smart head that appears to size up and meet every situation better than do many other pitchers with a world of steam. Ferrell has beaten every opposing club in the league except Detroit and has lost only to his old mates in Cleveland.

MANY RIDERS OVERLOOK WIND RESISTANCE

Too many young jockeys merely sit on a horse and guide him. They do not study the scientific points of race riding. Instead of helping a horse they may hurt his chances by unconsciously decreasing his speed. A veteran rider, Alf (Whitey) Abel, observes that one of the chief defects of the youngsters is the overlooking of wind resistance. Some of the kids ride with their elbows sticking almost straight out like pieces of flat board on each side of the horse. They make no effort to crouch as low as possible behind the racer's head. Such a style causes wind resistance, when a little study would show the jockeys that by discarding such tactics they could help their mounts to run faster.

Abel says he found out years ago that even so small a thing as a whip can add to wind resistance. He held the whip upright in his right hand after using it on his horse in the backstretch, and instantly he felt a terrific tugging at the bat. Abel swung it downward instantly and held it along the horse's flank. The tugging ceased immediately and the jockey realized that the whip had been causing at least a little wind resistance. It was removed just in time to save a race by a nose. Head and elbows naturally create greater resistance and slow up a horse sufficiently to cause defeat.

ANDERSON ACCUSED OF OFFERING ALIBIS

Southern California has spent $10,000 a season in scouting to beat Notre Dame in football, was the recent charge of Hunk Anderson, former coach of the Irish and now at North Carolina State. It will be recalled that in a talk to the Optimists' Club, of South Bend, universities of the country were taken to task for carrying gridiron scouting to extremes. Anderson charged that the Trojans scouted Notre Dame at least six or seven times each season before the teams met. Not only did they have whole batteries of scouts, he said, but they were so eager to win that they took moving pictures of every Irish play and knew exactly what the South Bend offenses and defenses were. Hunk thinks it is carrying things too far when a college spends $10,000 to get advance information that will enable it to defeat a single opponent.

Hunk Anderson

Looking back over Notre Dame's big games from year to year, Anderson reveals that the Irish found Army easier to beat on an average than most of the other teams faced because Army players moved only on orders. Hunk explains that the Cadets wouldn't shift a tackle until orders came from the bench, and hence presented the same defense for every play.

Since Anderson made his talk, some grid fans have been mean enough to intimate that Hunk may have been offering a few veiled alibis in his own behalf. They point out that Southern California also spent $10,000 a year trying to beat Knute Rockne's Notre Dame teams, and yet won only one game out of five, whereas the same Trojans beat Anderson's Irish elevens three times in a row. And as for Army being so easy, it is recalled that the Cadets trounced Anderson's team, 12 to 0, in 1931, when the Irish had rated to win.

SCOTTY CAMPBELL . . . MEDALIST AND FAVORITE TO WIN TOURNEY

McCormick, city champion of Los Angeles, and Campbell, Seattle wonder, who holds the Canadian amateur championship, were two strong favorites as the National Public Links golf tournament moved into the second day of match play at South Park today. They were heard with the Trained Seals of the sports department of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph over WCAE last night, along with Claire Kemp, head of the San Francisco delegation in the tournament. Campbell is the tourney medalist, gallery choice. These are Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph pictures.

SEATTLE STAR CONSOLATION GOLF VICTOR

Harry Umbinetti, a 20-year-old boy from Seattle, Wash., turned in a card of 73 in the second round to win the 36-hole consolation honors of the National Public Links tournament yesterday at North Park. The round of 75, added to a first round of 76, gave the Seattle boy a one-stroke margin over Paul Bohardt, of Dayton, and William Cady, of Santa Monica, Cal.

Bohardt and Cady played off their 150 deadlock and the Dayton boy won. Jack Dunphy, of Altadena, Cal., and Stanley Seymour were tied at 151. Dunphy winning in the playoff.

Umbinetti's card—

Umbinetti, Bohardt, Cady and Dunphy were presented the four fine prizes given the leaders by the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph. The presentation was made last night at the tournament headquarters in the Fort Pitt Hotel.

Young Cady was the favorite to win first prize after his first round of 72, par for the difficult course, and the best card turned in for 18 holes. But Cady weakened in the stretch as he rolled up a 78.

The North Park course was in such fine shape that most of the visitors expressed their pleasure over their day on the layout. Walter Loeffler, North Park pro, stated he attributed the large field of contestants to the quality of the prizes given by the Sun-Telegraph. The scores:

H. Umbinetti, Seattle	76 73—149

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF YESTERDAY: THE ATTACK ON THE U. S. A.—On July 21, 1918, at about 10:30 A. M., the German submarine U-156 suddenly rose to the surface some 2½ miles off Orleans, Mass., on the southeastern elbow of Cape Cod, and sank the tug "Perth Amboy" and four barges by gunfire. Of the several hundred shells fired, a few landed on American soil, barely missing some cottagers watching the fray. The sub also deliberately fired on the lifesavers from the Nauset Harbor Station as they pulled a boat alongside the sinking hulks. There were 16 men on the tug and 10 on the four barges, a few of whom were wounded. The U-156 subsequently was lost in the great mine field laid across the North Sea. THE DEMON PHOTOGRAPHER—Stefan C. Duff, a newspaper photographer in New York, enlisted as a sergeant of the U. S. Signal Corps when America entered the World War. He soon became known as the "Camera Kid" or the "Demon Photographer" for his intrepidity in taking pictures in the midst of bullets and shellfire. In July, 1918, at Chateau Thierry, Duff, who was unarmed except for a camera, suddenly came upon a camouflaged German machine gun nest. He walked over and, training his camera upon the frightened Germans, ordered them to put up their hands. The six Germans complied. Duff photographed them and then escorted the prisoners to the American lines. Duff was promoted to Lieutenant. He died in an automobile accident in Brooklyn, March 7, 1920, when his car skidded on the ice of the pavement.

TOMORROW: THE FATHER OF THREE CENTURIES.

HONOLULU LAD STARS, MEETS CAMPBELL

By TOM BIRKS

SOUTH PARK, Aug. 2. — The amazing golf that Arthur Armstrong, 17-year-old Englishman from Honolulu, flashed in breezing through the third round this morning and the thrills which his match with Albert (Scoty) Campbell, of Seattle, the medalist, promised in the quarter-finals this afternoon overshadowed the elimination of Charley Farrera, of San Francisco, the defending champion, in the National Public Links championships here today.

Armstrong, apparently pretty well recovered from attack of stomach trouble which put him in the County Hospital with a temperature of 104 Tuesday night, literally burned up the South Park course in eliminating Frank Babis, of Detroit, 6 and 5, in their third round duel. Starting out in a driving rain, which had fallen away to a drizzle as he finished, Hawaiia's title hope rushed to the turn in 34, four under par, to stand 5 up, aided by seven one-putt grens, was five under par for the 13 holes required to close out Babis. Two eagles, one on the par-5 470-yard seventh hole, and another on the par-5 451-yard twelfth, and numerous birdies dotted Armstrong's card. The cards:

Out—
Armstrong	543	444	534—34
Babis	644	544	435—39
In—
Armstrong	443	4
Babis	445	4

CAMPBELL ADVANCES

Campbell, Canadian amateur champion, who played 36 holes in par in winning the medal and who seldom has deviated from perfect figures since the match play began, needed all of his brilliance to defeat Fred Gordon, of Santa Monica, 2 and 1.

Ferrera, who barely survived the qualifying test and who has not been able to regain the stride which carried him to the title last year, was put out by Joe Coria, of St. Paul, 5 and 3.

Other quarter-final matches find Bruce McCormick, of Los Angeles, meeting Lorraine oung, of San Antonio; Bruce Erickson, of Los Angeles, clashing with D. A. Mitchell, of Indianapolis, and Coria meeting Gordon Denney, of Louisville.

YOUNG, DENNY WIN

Young, the San Antonio youth who fired birdie after birdie in eliminating Carl Kauffmann, Pittsburgh's three times champion, in the second round yesterday, played almost as sensationally today in accounting for Johnny Ross, of Los Angeles, 1 up. Denny, who put out Andy Szwedka, city champion, in the second round, remained in the title chase by defeating R. Stracfaci, Brooklyn, 2 and 1. The results of third round matches:

Albert Campbell, Seattle, defeated Fred Gordon, Santa Monica, 2 and 1.
Arthur Armstrong, Honolulu, defeated Frank Babis, Detroit, 6 and 5.
Bruce McCormick, Los Angeles, defeated J. Jewett, Gary, Ind., 1 up.
Lorraine Young, San Antonio, defeated Johnny Ross, Los Angeles, 1 up.
Dave Mitchell, Indianapolis, defeated Mike Balega, Minneapolis, 3 and 2.
Joe Coria, St. Paul, defeated Charle Ferrera, San Francisco, 5 and 3.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 1.—The Pirates of Pittsburgh today had the matter of winning over the Reds put up to them in such a manner as to make them hustle to the limit to gain a decision. As they prepared to windup a four-game set with the lowly Rhinelanders, the Traynor Clan had but one victory to show for their stay in this city. A loss of three games in four battles would be annoying to every supporter of the Buccaneer outfit.

The Freebooters were far in front in the early innings of yesterday's fray, but they cracked in the sixth when the Dressen combination rushed over four tallies to take a one-run lead, from which the Pittsburghers could not recover. The score of the third clash of the series was 7 to 6.

PITCHERS CRIPPLED

Manager Traynor's slab staff is in such a sorry state he hardly knows where to look for a hurler for the game of today. Several of Pie's sharpshooters are on the hospital list. Red Lucas and Ed Holley are in fair shape and either of these righthanders may draw the assignment. Benny Frey is due to work for the home team.

Bill Swift carried a three-run lead into the sixth round yesterday, but both he and Leon Chagnon were blasted from the hill before the inning was over, Hal Smith finishing.

The Pirates jumped all over Paul Derringer in the first five rounds, making three tallies in the first and two more in the third. They added another in the sixth, but all of these were discounted by the offensive unleashed by the Reds as the contest progressed. The Dressens picked up single runs in the first, fourth and fifth and then shot the works and won in the sixth.

SI HALTS BUCS

Silas Johnson went to the slab on top of the Reds' big bombardment, and Silas had so much stuff to show the Buccos they made but one hit in the three remaining rounds. Chick Hafey reached Swift for a homer in the fourth round.

Loughran Bows To Johnny Risko

By PHIL GRABOWSKI

Softball Tournament Secretary

The E. J. Noftz, Commercial Garage and S. A. O'Tooles teams advanced to the quarter-final round by scoring victories in the playoff series yesterday in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph's Pennsylvania amateur softball tournament.

Manager Henry Noftz's crew easily defeated the Koppers Coal team, 18 to 2, at Washington Park. Although Pitcher Johnny Oberc, of the winners, issued 10 walks, he yielded only three hits. Bill Mrozowski clouted two home runs, while Oberc, Cookstein and Starr each connected for the circuit for the Noftz team.

Shortfielder Vincent Del Greco starred as the Commercials pounded Pitcher Bob Thomson to defeat the American Fruit Growers, champions of Bracket I, 13 to 1, on the Peabody High School diamond. Vince hit a four-bagger in the second inning. Charles Rubinoff, who played a nice game in left field for the winning team, hit two round-trippers to carry off the batting honors, while Johnny Metz, also of the Commercials, connected for a homer.

The S. A. O'Tooles, of Hazelwood, slugged their way to a 15-2 triumph over the Hungry Nine Club, of Carnegie. Tom McKenna, star flinger of the O'Tooles, allowed only four hits.

Johnny O'Connor led the winners in hitting, with two home runs, a double and a single. Tom Burke also slammed a four-bagger. This game was played on the Schenley High Feild.

Tomorrow evening the Fort Black Community Club will entertain the Ardmore Gardens in a playoff series on the Peabody High School Field, while the Elizabeth Produce team opposes Adams Bottles in another contest on the Schenley High School Field.

Personalities In Softball

Fred Crum, who thrilled many fans with his spectacular basketball play while attending Schenley High School for four years, is the captain of the Fort Black Community Club in Bracket V of the senior division of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph's amateur softball tournament. He also captained the Schenley basketball team which won the city championship by defeating Westinghouse High in 1931. Last year Crum played with the W. S. Willigs floor team, which was rated one of the five best in Western Pennsylvania. He plays shortstop for the Blacks and is a fine fielder and a dangerous batsman. Fred graduated from Schenley in '31. The Fort Black team meets Ardmore Gardens in its first playoff series game tomorrow.

Fred Crum

Although the Snubs A. C., of the South Side, did not win a place in the playoffs, it remained in the tournament until it finished its seven-game schedule. Joseph Gorcey, who does practically all of the pitching for the Snubs, is the team's star flinger. It was his steady pitching that enabled the South Side aggregation to defeat the Commercial Garage team, winner of the Bracket V title. The Snubs finished with four defeats and three victories. Since they defeated the Commercials, the South Siders have been playing exhibition games and have won the majority of them.

An acute "charley horse" today sent Chuck Klein, outfielder of the Cubs, to a Chicago hospital for treatment and observation. He will be lost to the team for an indefinite period, physicians said.

Glenn Cunningham, track star, and his bride, the former Margaret Speir, of Peabody, Kan., who married late yesterday at Marion, Kan., today were on a honeymoon trip to San Francisco, from which city Cunningham will sail on August 16 for Japan with the United States track team.

Bill Bonthron, Princeton track star, established a world record for 1,320 yards yesterday at Stockholm when he ran the distance in three minutes and eight-tenths of a second.

Only five of the eight seeded players were among the survivors today as quarter-final matches were staged in the Maidstone Club women's invitation tennis tournament at Easthampton, L. I. Helen Fulton, Chicago, met Katherine Winthrop, Boston, in today's feature match.

Fay Draper, John Lyman, Ivan Fuqua and George Spitz starred as American track and field stars won six out of eight events in a meet yesterday at Munich.

Gene Sarazen, Harry Cooper, Denny Shute and Ky Laffoon, American pros, ranked as favorites as play in the Canadian open golf tournament opened today at Toronto.

Dr. J. S. Compton, of Bluefield, W. Va., carded 166 for 36 holes to win the sixth annual Virginia senior golf tournament, concluded yesterday at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. Dr. Gerry Hogg, of Lewisburg, W. Va., was second with 161.

George Meinkoutsh, Notre Dame fullback, is going to Czecho-Slovakia to take the mineral baths before the opening of the football season. He has been ill since last year.

Tee Shots

The only squawk Champion Charley Ferrera has about the South Park course, and he says he'll register the same kick on any course that confronts him, is the jibbing of the said fraction. Ferrera is loud in his praise of the local course, admitting it to be the best public links layout over which he ever has played. But those furrows . . . no can make 'em as far as Charley is concerned . . . all of 'em.

There is, or was, one bright youngster hanging around the South Park course until the boys caught up with him yesterday. He hid in the woods living the No. 15 fairway and stole all the balls he possibly could. Art Armstrong and Larsen were playing their match yesterday and Larsen drove a ball into the trees. The kid grabbed it and scooted away, but one alert policeman gave chase and eventually caught the culprit.

Questioned, he admitted his thefts and during the course of the investigation, it developed that he's used one ball back to the player from which he stole same for 22 cents. Smart lad.

Armstrong, by the way, iced off on too much buttermilk Tuesday evening after qualifying and reported at the starting tee yesterday with a temperature and with his tummy very much on the bum.

When the news reached the press tent and the clubhouse that Carl Kaufmann was five down on nine to Lorraine Young, the San Antonio star, gasps of surprise were as plentiful as stages at a turn dance. Kaufmann, you know, had been a top-heavy favorite. No one knew much about Young, but after his easy triumph the won 6 and 5 he immediately was advanced into the rank of the favorites.

Young, by the way, is one of the coolest, most calm and collected players in the field. He admits he's been at medal play, but loves individual competition. "A gallery of $10,000 affects him as much as the count of three and two affects Babe Ruth with John Q. Sandlot pitching and right field only 30 feet from the plate.

Honus Says:

By HONUS WAGNER,

Former Star, Now Coach of Pirates.

To the Sports Editor:

Charley Dressen is the latest to join the National League as a manager and everyone wishes him well. There was a time, you know, when a new manager would join a team and get big headlines. But look at the competition he is up against today! If it isn't a real war, it's the threat of one or it is a civil war, or something. It's got so a fellow don't know what the next day's news from the battlefront will be. I wish these fellows over in Europe would arrange their little slugfests so that baseball gets a chance now and then.

Regards,

HONUS WAGNER.

GIANTS TURN INTO SLUGGERS TO INCREASE LEAD

OTT'S HOMERS LEAD ATTACK ON BRAVES

Associated Press.

The New York Giants, who were accused of being "hitless wonders," of winning the world championship with nothing but the strong arms of four pitchers, and even of talking their way to the title last season, have fashioned a reply with their bats this season.

Bill Terry's reputedly weak-hitting team has turned into an aggregation of home run hitters, collecting 96 so far.

Mel Ott, youthful leader of the belting brigade, slammed his twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth homers yesterday to tighten his grip on the National League lead and to help his club strengthen its position at the top of the standing with a double victory over the Braves. The scores were 11 to 2 and 10 to 3.

FOUR GAMES AHEAD

Johnny Salveson, making his first start since his return from Montreal, and Carl Hubbell shared the pitching burden of the opener, while Hal Schumacher, this year's leader of the pitching "big four," rang up his sixteenth triumph in the afterpiece, contributing a homer to his own cause.

The double triumph increased New York's lead to four full games as the third-place Cardinals, with Paul Dean on the hill, bumped off the second-place Cubs, 4 to 0.

The almost daily exchange of first and second places in the American League by the Yankees and Tigers took place on schedule as Detroit walloped the Cleveland Indians, 10 to 7, in a free swinging contest which produced 31 hits while the Red Sox, with former Yankees in the starring roles, downed the New York Yanks, 7 to 4.

TAILENDERS STAR

Down in the second divisions most of the excitement came from the Reds, who spotted Pittsburgh's Pirates a three run lead then won, 7-6, on Chick Hafey's fourteenth homer plus a four-run rally in the seventh, and by the Senators, who battered out an 11-7 decision over the Athletics in a slugfest which produced five circuit blows, two by Doc Cramer of the A's.

The cellar dwelling White Sox took both ends of a bargain bill from St. Louis, 10-6 and 4-2, to drop the losers into sixth place behind Washington. Brooklyn's Dodgers belted out an 8-to-4 decision over the Phillies.

Our Pirates Can't 'Jake It' On Manager Traynor

Pie, Like Frisch, Knows When Men Aren't Trying

By CHARLES J. DOYLE

Pie Traynor is getting ready to take drastic action against several Pirates who have shown a tendency to "jake it". The term is applied to athletes who ask to be excused from a game owing to slight or imaginary injuries.

When Traynor declaims on the question of injuries or sickness you are listening to expert testimony, for Harold has consistently stayed on the job with ugly and dangerous spike wounds, dislocated fingers, a broken nose and sinus attacks. Pie naturally thinks he knows when a player is "jaking," so you may expect some explosion even before the present flag race is over unless there is a falling off in alibis.

You would be surprised if you knew how many "jaking" players were scattered in the major league clubs, and some of them command princely salaries. The Pittsburgh club has several at the present time and Traynor can put his finger on them in a jiffy. But Pie will give them a chance to show a better spirit before he takes summary action.

FRISCH PRODS 'EM

To illustrate on this surprising phase of baseball, just step into the Cardinal clubhouse for a few minutes before the start of the third game of the Pirate-Cardinal series. The Redbirds are nursing flag ambitions, an emotion that takes on startling significance when you gaze at a big chart they have hanging on a conspicuous part of the wall.

The graph or chart reminds you of a Rotary or Kiwanis method of stirring up the assemblage. In big black figures are the standing of the clubs right up to date. Plastered all over the chart are inspirational slogans—samples—"What are you doing today to win?" "Play for your team!" "Win today's game!"

But Frankie Frisch, scrappy manager, who has been warned by President Heydler for his actions toward the umpires, is beside himself with a mixture of anger and regret. A couple of potential young stars have some little injury and they want to get out of the game. Here is Frank hitting the ceiling:

"Say, what's this great game of ball coming to? Do you realize there is a fine chance for every man here to collect an extra $5,000 this fall if we all stay in there and hustle! Doesn't that interest you kids who say you want to be ball players! Five thousand dollars in front of you and you want to get out of the game! Whew!!"

READS RIOT ACT

The Fordham Flash stops to catch his breath and roars again:

"What in the name of sense could you fellows do if you get out of baseball. Can you pick up another job that pays like this? Answer me that! Well, I'll answer it! You can't do anything, and the streets are filled with unemployed men. Twenty-two years old and you want to get out with a sore thumb!"

Frankie might have told them of the years he played with a broken finger that looked like a distorted carrot. He starred in one world series under such a handicap and he often has played with spike wounds acquired in his wild dashes around the sacks.

MANAGER PIE TRAYNOR

NOT KIDDING PIE

Frisch was still seething with emotion as he came to the playing field. I was standing at the batting cage when he resumed his frank complaints:

"Can you figure that out? Just take a look at that kid at the plate. He doesn't want to play today. He's the picture of health and strength, yet he wants to get out of there. What's baseball coming to, anyhow?"

Frisch and Traynor hold the same views. Eddie Roush once cut Traynor in three places in a wild slide into third. The doctors told Pie to stay out at least 10 days. Bill McKechnie had to fight Traynor to keep him out one day. The Buccos had a chance to get somewhere and Pie insisted on going along with them. If any member of the club possessed with "jaking" tendencies thinks he is fooling Traynor, he is due for a rude awakening.

Second and third round frays comprise today's card of competition in the first annual Edgeworth Club invitation men's doubles tennis tournament, the aim of officials being to hustle the field into the quarter-final frame before dusk tonight.

Seeded arrays breezed though the inaugural session yesterday mainly without serious opposition, the crack hook-up of Frank Broida and McCook Reed even working off two tilts to pace the contending host of 32 teams into the bracket of eight. Broida and Reed, volleyed and smashed to victory over Jack Redmond and Art Glaser, 6-2, 6-3, and went on to eliminate Dr. Chick Cochrane and Dr. Willard Flint, 6-2, 6-4.

The top seeded duo, Dr. Dave and Billy O'Loughlin accounted for Jack Beatty and Bill Spindler, 6-1, 6-3, and the second ranked pair, Dr. John O'Loughlin and Sam Harbison, clicked off Frank Smith and Austin Famariss, 6-1, 6-1. The summary:

SCHRICKER NEW BOXING COACH FOR PITT

Jack Schricker, of Carrick, and William Kowallis, of Duquesne, are the two newest additions to the University of Pittsburgh athletic staff, it was announced this morning by Pitt authorities. Schricker will replace Joe Orsini as varsity boxing coach, and Kowallis will take over freshman basketball, succeeding Dr. Paul Zehfuss.

Jack Schricker

Schricker entered Pitt in 1930, the same academic year that boxing was added to the varsity schedule. He took part in his first varsity bout in 1932 and won the Intercollegiate Conference 155-pound championship that year, holding it for two seasons. In 1934 he captained the varsity squad.

William (Docky) Kowallis is the younger brother of Dr. George Kowallis, present varsity assistant coach. He was the regular guard on the 1929-30 Pitt quintet, was shifted to forward in 1930-31, and was co-captain in 1931-32.

Kowallis replaces Dr. Paul Zehfuss, freshman coach for the past four seasons.

Beck and Raymond Aren't Partners Any More

By HARRY KECK, Sports Editor

Things are beginning to pop in a boxing way locally . . . Lots of news . . . First of all, Jules Beck and Lew Raymond have severed promoting relations . . . Jules goes his way and Lew goes his . . . Both will remain in the business, Jules operating at Greenlee Field, beginning one week from tonight, when he has Young Stuhley, of Chicago, and Anson Green, of Homestead, in the 10-round main bout, a good match, with Stuhley having just recently grabbed a decision over Vince Dundee, the middleweight champion, in a non-title bout in Chicago, and the local fans getting steamed up over the Dundee-Ted Yarosz title bout at Forbes Field next month . . . Raymond will promote a show at Conneaut Lake and is working on another one at Canton, O., and has a few other irons in the fire.

Lew Raymond

Jules Beck

Opposing the Greenlee Field show, Hickey Park, in Millvale, will offer a bill of three eight-rounders and three five-rounders next Monday night. Mose Butch will meet Georgie Pace in the main event, and Charley Blozevich meets Charley Baxter, Nat Litfin will engage an opponent to be named and Kid Sterling boxes Sammy Paris in the five-rounders.

The ticket arrangement for the Yarosz-Dundee Show has been decided upon and the pasteboards were ordered yesterday. There will be approximately 3,000 seats on the field at $5 plus tax, and the first floor boxes also will be $5. The first seven rows downstairs and the entire upstairs part of the old grandstand will sell for $3, while the general admission baseball seats in the old grandstand and part of the new right field stand will go for $2 plus tax. The remainder of the right field stand will be sold at $1. On this basis it is estimated that there will be more than 6,000 seats at $5, about 4,000 at $3, 18,000 at $2 and 10,000 at $1. This allows for a sellout gate of close to $90,000.

Joey Speigal, "all sored up" over the bum decision against him in his bout with Tiger Joe Randall at Hickey Park Monday night, wants to fight the Tiger again, and the match may be made. . . . Speigal also may appear in the semi-final to a return bout between Johnny Risko and Patsy Perroni in the Cleveland Stadium. . . . There'll be a benefit amateur boxing show for the Charleroi baseball team at its park Saturday night, beginning at 9:30. . . . Doc McClelland, the boxing commissoner, and Bill Simendinger have their heads together on arranging that 12-bout amateur boxing show for the Police Pension Fund show at Forbes Field, August 21.

TONIGHT'S FIGHTS

Jack Ennis vs. Thys Menger, 8 rounds, Teterboro, N. J.

LEADERS FACE BIG TEST IN MT. OLIVER

With the idea in mind of duplicating the game turned in at Olympia Park a few weeks ago when the champion Books nine was defeated, the Mt. Oliver tossers will invade the home of the champs again this evening in the feature tussle on the City League card.

The Books entrenched themselves more firmly in first place last evening by nosing out Dormont, 8 to 7, but cannot afford to led down against Mt. Oliver this evening.

In the league's other contest, the Vaughans and Immaculate Heart are to clash on the West Penn Park diamond.

BACK OF THE SYMBOL

WHEREVER you see this sign, the whole nation is at hand—within your reach.

Back of this symbol are a million people—the people who own and the people who operate the telephone business of the nation. They are the Bell System.

With their families, if all lived in Pennsylvania, they would constitute a city the size of Philadelphia, plus an Allentown, an Altoona, an Erie, a Harrisburg, a Reading, a Scranton, a Wilkes-Barre and, in addition, two cities as great as Pittsburgh.

The owners have invested savings—an average of $3,000 each—in Bell System securities. The workers have invested their effort and ability in the telephone industry. More than a hundred thousand have done both—workers who are share-holders in the telephone business.

Back of the symbol is the Bell Telephone Laboratories, birthplace of telephone invention and development.

Back of it is the Bell System headquarters organization, where nation-wide telephone experience is studied, co-ordinated, and made available to all parts of the system.

BELL owners and Bell workers are in every section of the state and nation. They are your friends, your neighbors, interested in things civic, in their government, in the telephone business.

By the service you know it best. To the encouragement of your fullest and most exacting use of that service the telephone organization devotes itself.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF PENNSYLVANIA

Associated with the Bell System—participating in and benefiting from the telephone research, telephone development and nation-wide telephone experience which have given America the world leadership in telephone service.

PROFIT-TAKING DEPRESSES STOCKS

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—(AP.)—Financial markets were a trifle uneasy today and quiet profit-taking was the rule in most categories.

Stocks drifted moderately lower from the start, although extreme dullness prevailed in all sections of the list. No serious repercussion was created by the death of President von Hindenburg, as this event was not unexpected. The London market and most foreign exchanges were steady in the face of German developments. There was little other news of consequence.

Grains displayed slightly erratic tendencies under realizing despite private estimates of the smallest crops since 1894. Drought losses were termed by one forecaster as "a national disaster without parallel in American agriculture." Wheat rallied more than a cent a bushel in the afternoon.

Cotton was a bit lower. Silver was firm and rubber about even. Bonds were listless. The German mark, heavy at one time, regained most of its losses.

Shares of Sterling Products dropped 2 points. The company's second quarter statement showed a decline in earnings compared with the preceding quarter. United States Smelting was off nearly 2, and losers of fractions to a point or so included American Telephone, United States Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, Bethlehem Steel, National Steel, Consolidated Gas and Westinghouse.

Sentiment in the street was not too bearish, although most market analysts were advising a cautious attitude toward equities generally and some were suggesting the lightening of commitments on bulges such as occurred in yesterday's session.

While the Austrian situation appeared to be somewhat more tranquil, foreign observers pointed out that the European picture as a whole is clouded with potentialities which might bring developments that would be far from pleasant. A number of speculators cashed in moderate gains in the early trading and indicated they would retire to the sidelines until the outlook becomes clearer.

There were many guesses as to what the President will or will not say when he starts his cross-country journey back to the White House. Before making any announcement of importance, however, it was believed in most financial quarters the Chief Executive will consult with cabinet members and other advisers and that it may be another week or more before he touches on general business conditions and pending administrative plans.

Hopes were growing for a fall revival of trade despite the existing cloudy economic horizon. Expectations of an expansion of commercial and industrial loans of member banks of the Federal Reserve System were voiced by the American Bankers' Association Journal.

WHEAT CLOSES AT DECLINE

Upturns which failed to hold were based largely on August unofficial crop estimates indicating that the 1934 yields of the five principal cereals were below domestic requirements. The total production of wheat, corn, oats, rye and barley this season was placed at 2,800,000,00 bushels, the smallest aggregate since 1924.

Wheat closed uneven, ⅜c lower to ¼c higher compared with yesterday's finish, September, new, $1.03 to 1.03⅛; corn, ⅛ to ½c down, September, 70¾ to 70¾c; oats unchanged to ¼c up, and provisions 7 to 15c advanced.

Brewing Receiver Removal Refused

The petition to remove Louis Wechsler as receiver of the Bentleyville Brewing Company, Inc., of Bentleyville, Washington County, filed by Mary Boss and Rudolph C. Becher, of New York, trading as Voss Ice Machine Company, a creditor of the brewing company, was dismissed by Federal Judge F. P. Schoonmaker.

Counsel for the petitioners said that after filing the petition they found some of the averments alleged were unfounded. The hearing on a petition of George C. Moeller for foreclosure on a $90,000 mortgage he holds against the brewing company was continued until the October term of court.

The receiver was represented by Attorneys O. K. Eaton and I. M. Goldsmith.

CREDIT BARRIER PILES UP BANK RESERVES

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—The unprecedented piling up of unused excess reserves in the banks of the country constitutes a reminder that, though you can lead a horse to water, you can't make him drink.

Mr. Rukeyser

Bankers, hungry for good commercial loans, insist that the barrier to loan expansion is the timidity of good borrowers.

This was not always the case. Before the bank holiday, the chief obstacle was the fear of lenders, who sought to become super liquid in order to be able to meet extraordinary demands on the part of depositors. Since the inauguration of deposit insurance, bankers recognize that the need for super liquidity no longer exists. In fact, some bankers perceive that it is foolish to pay the cost of deposit insurance unless they are willing to lend normally and employ funds profitably.

CONFIDENCE LACKING

If bankers wish to remain pure and to stick to self-liquidating short-term loans, there can be little demand for funds under present conditions.

The purpose of the short-term loan is to help profitable concerns over seasonal or other peaks in their business. But in this sense there are no real peaks in this phase of subnormal business volume.

Moreover, like the banks, the strong business concerns are still long of money. Since 1921, they learned to free themselves of the banks by accumulating working capital out of profits, and through the sale of securities when the markets would absorb them.

This independence from dependence on the banks started long before the current depression, and accounted for the fact that the banks, guided by a profit motive, wandered away from the field of strict commercial banking. The result was the boom-time virtual transformation of banks into investment trusts, with their huge portfolios of bonds and of real estate mortgages.

If the banks intend to stick to commercial banking, they will probably have to readjust themselves to diminished activity.

At present the situation is aggravated by a lack of confidence on the part of the business men, who are perplexed by political change at home and by violence overseas.

BANKERS PASSIVE

As Rudolph S. Hecht, New Orleans banker, pointed out in a recent speech:

"The basic requisite to the expansion of commercial bank loans is sound, normal business conditions on which to conduct sound, normal banking operations. The best business a bank can wish for is the opportunity to loan money to successful business men and manufacturers imbued with confidence to enter upon aggressive business enterprises and endowed with the ability to bring them to successful conclusions. Such loans mean business activity for the community, growing payrolls and prosperity. And the banker wants to make them because to be identified with such activities not only means profits to him, but, additionally, brings him the reward of good will in his community."

The banker feels that he is more or less passive, and that he must wait for the business community to make demands on him.

Psychologically, he could help by calling in his customers who have survived the depression, and reassuring them of his confidence in them. That would be a reflationay attitude.

By the same token, bank examiners should show the same attitude toward banks.

ROOSEVELT SEA TRIP ENDING

ABOARD THE CRUISER NEW ORLEANS, EN ROUTE WITH PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT TO ASTORIA, ORE., Aug. 2.—(AP.)—President Roosevelt sailed along the shores of the United States today, home from an epochal voyage to American territories.

The cruisers Houston and New Orleans crept slowly along the Oregon coast early today and pointed for a swing into the Columbia River—the water avenue of the Pacific Northwest—by early afternoon.

Refreshed by a month at sea and satisfied with the status of the American ocean outposts, Roosevelt was eager to go over his own continental soil again. His trunks were packed full of reports and data.

The President will debark from his long sea journey at Portland tomorrow morning. He will immediately set out for a cross-country train trip with first stops at the Bonneville project in Oregon and the Grand Coulee power and irrigation project in Washington.

Cast Into Eden

By HENRY C. ROWLAND

CHAPTER XII

Nothing happened to disturb their slumber unless it was a certain lack of comfort and then the early morning chill. The latter woke Jerome at dawn. He edged away without rousing Linda and went out into the fresh and fragrant morning.

In the hope of sighting some craft that might be within signaling distance, he went down the cool dark tunnel of the ravine to the beach. The day was breaking suddenly, as it does in the tropics, and the wide still expanse of sea was serene but desolate.

Jerome felt that they should really camp on the other side of the island in the hope of attracting the attention of some passing vessel. The ship courses were not far. But they had no means of making a shelter and Linda would not give up the sanctuary of the house with unknown uncouth creatures prowling about.

He bathed, gathered a few shell fish, and went back up the little stream to the cool fresh beauty spot. As he came under the ledge he heard Linda's voice speaking in coaxing cajoling tones and thought she must be making friends with the macaw. The big brilliant bird had held himself aloof as if resenting their presence, like the terrifying beast of the night before, whatever it might be.

FEEDS ANIMAL

He clambered up and saw Linda sitting on the edge of the porch. What claimed his attention was a round little beast squatting on the turf four or five yards in front of her. It was partly turned away from him and at first glance he could not determine its species.

Linda was trying to coax it closer with lumps of sugar. As Jerome watched she tossed a lump toward the little animal that reached out a long arm and snatched it, then started to nibble and suck at it, never taking its eyes from her. Jerome, watching with only his head and shoulder above the ledge, saw then it was a little ape—a chimpanzee he thought.

As he continued to watch there came a rustle from a thick clump of bamboo. Jerome caught his breath. Another animal appeared. It was of the same species but larger. That would be the mother. For a moment it stood half crouching, long arms extended, and knuckles on the ground. Its eyes were flickering from Linda, who stiffened suddenly, to the little fellow in front of her. Linda did not move.

As if unable to overcome its greed and envy, the newcomer crossed the intervening space in a series of bounds and grabbed the piece of sugar from the smaller one. There was a brief scuffle and angry chattering of clucks and squeals.

Jerome thought he understood what had puzzled him. It looked as if the naturalist had imported some chimpanzees that had the freedom of the island and bred there. This would account for everything that could be carried off having been so carefully put away. But it did not account for the big creature of which they had caught a glimpse making off from the old ruined tower.

MYSTERY ANSWERED

This mystery seemed then to be answered. Something came crashing through the denser growth to the right of the bamboos. There emerged a creature so huge and forbidding that Jerome's heart missed a beat and then began to pound. He saw that it was a full-grown gorilla.

It stood for a moment nearly erect, watching Linda. And as she did not move, it drew near the scuffling pair and dealt the larger a swinging cuff that knocked it to one side. It then picked up the baby that straddled one hip and reached up for a pendulous breast.

The whole performance was so grotesquely human that Jerome would have laughed if it had not been for the great size of the mother and the vexed, suspicious expression on the face she turned to Linda, precisely as if to say, "What do you mean by giving my baby sugar?"

Linda did not budge. She said in a placating tone. "Don't take it so hard, old girl. It won't hurt him. Have a piece yourself," and she tossed her a lump of sugar.

Jerome had never felt so great a rush of admiration for any display of cool nerve and courage. The big she-gorilla made a grimace that bared her teeth. It must have been either a demonstration of defiance.

Synopsis

Jerome Crain, young naval architect, and a beautiful society girl, named Linda, land on a strange island in the Caribbean after having fled from a quarantined yacht. Their skiff is mysteriously set adrift and their clothes stolen, yet there is no other sign of a living human, at first. Intermittently, however, blood-curdling cries come from the jungle. The mystery deepens with the finding of a well-kept though deserted plantation. They take refuge in a small house there. That night, Linda's slip is torn off her by some unseen creature and again the eerie scream is heard. Linda, frightened, insists that Jerome stay near her. "Night before last you couldn't bear the prospect of having me aboard the same yacht with you," he says, ironically, "and now you insist on having me in the same house."

Now Go On

hostility, or an amiable gorilla smile. She swung down, snapped up the sweet morsel, sniffed at it, then began to munch it.

Jerome was thinking, "That settles it. This naturalist has imported not chimpanzees from South America but gorillas from Africa."

GORILLAS FOR NEIGHBORS

Then suddenly as if she had made concession enough the mother gorilla let out a few resonant chatters that might have been "Good day and thanks," swung around, dealt her larger offspring another maternal cuff, and bounded off into the thicket carrying her baby, with the little boy leaping along beside her. As they disappeared Jerome hauled himself up and hurried to where Linda had sunk down on the porch.

"My knees won't get me up," she said.

"My legs feel stuffed with cotton, too."

"So that's the sort of neighbors we have."

"Yes, it was the old man we saw yesterday in my shirt, darn him. It was he that paid us the call last evening, thumping his chest before asking us, like the macaw, what the hell we wanted here."

"There may be a whole tribe of them," Linda said.

"Possibly. I suppose she has a baby every year and that mounts up. There's no telling how long they've been here."

"But, Jerry, aren't they terribly dangerous?"

"No. The director of the Washington Zoo told me once that tame gorillas are docile and good-natured."

"Gorillas? Is that what they are?"

"Must be. That lady was nearly six feet tall and weighed close to 400 pounds. And her husband will be bigger still."

"Then he didn't have on your shirt."

"I guess that was the Crown Prince. I see now how easy it was for him to cram the bell clapper into my shoe."

Junior Patrol Mail Box

Today is the last day for this week's contest, fellows!

Maybe you could bring your letters right to the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph headquarters if it is too late for the mailman to get them here on time.

"The best outing I ever had was when I went to the Chicago World's Fair. I liked it because it was so beautiful and another reason was because at the exhibition you get such big chocolate sodas.

"There were rolly coasters that went almost straight down, and the skyride was so high that you could see all over the fairgrounds.

"And best of all, I liked the agriculture building because they gave away so many good things to eat. The general exhibits building and the science building were nice, too."

That's what we call a pretty good letter, and we hope Helen writes another letter for every contest. And maybe more than one, if she wants to. Even though the best outing contest is over we would like to get more letters telling us where you have been and what you saw. Especially what you thought about the things you saw!

And we'll try to print all the letters here in the mailbox.

Daily Short Short-Story

By EMILY P. SHEAFE

Mrs. Bingham was painfully self-conscious, couldn't endure to be conspicuous in any way. But under a cloak of dignity she concealed her weakness like a soldier. The incidents of life had never roused in her very great emotion. She had never been blind with anger, wild with joy nor crushed by sorrow.

She yearned for an experience that would carry her out of herself so that she would act without thought of appearances or consequences. She wondered what she would do.

She found out one morning when her husband had given her five crisp $10 bills to finance a shopping expedition. In the city she went directly to a large department store where, in the restroom, she could remedy any defects in her appearance. Taking out her vanity case, she placed the open purse on the long shelf under the mirror.

A young woman standing next to her exclaimed: "What a lovely pocket book! May I look at it?"

Mrs. Bingham shrank from strangers, but managed to answer courteously, "Certainly."

The girl examined it with interest and, since it was open, looked at the fittings. "You're lucky," she commented.

"It isn't unique like yours."

Mrs. Bingham returned the purse to the shelf and went out.

Immediately outside was a table of late books. She selected two or three and reached into her purse to pay for them. The $50 was gone. She was stunned. The girl in the restroom! That was why she had admired the bag.

For the first time in her life she was thoroughly angry. That any one should have the audacity to steal anything of hers right out from under her nose roused a fighting spirit she did not know she possessed.

She marched off to find the thief. There was no one in the restroom. She was hurrying on when she spied the tapestry envelope on the shelf under the mirror. Without a qualm she opened it. There were the five new bills, clean and uncrumpled just as her husband had given them to her.

She transferred them to her own purse. Steal them from her indeed! No one could put that over! She was very proud of her prompt action.

Later she was selecting some bridge prizes when a sharp voice startled her. "Give me my money!" At the same time her purse was snatched from her hand.

It was the girl from the restroom. Mrs. Bingham grabbed at her pocket book. "How dare you!" she cried. The audacity of this thief!

"You let go!" The girl gave Mrs. Bingham a staggering shove that sent her caroming into a floorwalker who had pushed through the mob of shoppers gathered to see the fight. "Here, here! What's the trouble?" he demanded.

"She stole my money," the girl screamed.

"She's stealing my purse," Mrs. Bingham cried at the same time. She was heedless of the staring women, of everything but her rights.

The floorwalker parted them and took the purse. "Come to the office," he ordered.

Of course Mrs. Bingham had no trouble proving her claim. The manager simply called Mr. Bingham and asked him to describe the money he had given his wife that morning. It was all perfectly clear. That is to every one but the girl. She was crestfallen but not convinced. "You'll never make me believe that's not my money," she said. But she left abruptly when the manager begged Mrs. Bingham to have her arrested, which that lady, exhilarated by her triumph, graciously refused to do.

She was in the living room when her husband came home that night. "What was the trouble in town?" he asked.

Mrs. Bingham launched into a lively description of the incident. "And John," she finished, "it's terrible they way I fight when I'm mad. I would never have believed I could be so common. But that creature didn't get the best of me."

Mr. Bingham's eyes twinkled. "Good girl!" he commended. "But tell me, are you going in for thieving in a big way?"

"Why, John! It was my money."

"Was it?" He took from his coat pocket five brand new bank notes. "I just found the money I gave you this morning on the telephone stand."

Mrs. Bingham's mouth fell open. For a moment she stared. Then she laughed wildly and sank into a chair. When the storm subsided she said coldly: "John, you get in touch with that girl and return the money. I never want to see her again." John smiled. "How like a woman," he said indifferently.

ODD FACTS

Balzac, the great French novelist's hours for work were generally from 1 o'clock in the morning till 8; he would then have a short sleep, go out driving or visiting, dine early, and go to bed at 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening. At other times he would work from midnight till noon, or from 7 in the evening till 7 next morning. Balzac never read over his manuscripts till in proof, and the proof sheets always had enormous margins, which were soon covered with close writing, a short story being thus extended to a lengthy novel. These additions and corrections cost him a large part of his income.

A chimpanzee was brought up from birth alongside the child of an American scientist, who studied the progress of both "infants." The ape grew more rapidly than the child during the first stages, but after the first nine months the child was ahead of the animal in understanding suggestions and commands, and in ideas of language.

The Caribs have two distinct vocabularies—one used by men and by women when speaking to men; the other by women when speaking to each other and by men when repeating some saying of the women.

According to the Zulu Llonipa laws a woman may not call her husband by his name. She must say "father of so and so." She may not use words similar to the name; consequently the women have invented synonyms.

Logarithms were invented by Lord Napier and perfected by Dr. Briggs of Oxford, and "Napier's bones" were marked pieces of ivory used in the early computing of logarithms.

FLOWER OF THE WOODS PATTERN 791

Here is an effective yet simple quilt to make. The gay colored patches—and you can make them of the same material in each block or of scraps of material put in hit or miss—seem to be hiding under the perky leaf-like patches. It is this, no doubt, that gives it its name of Flower of the Woods. The block in its simplicity and effectiveness has some of the characteristics of the Friendship Fan and, like it, is a quilt of which any quiltmaker may be proud.

Pattern 791 comes to you with complete, simple instructions for cutting, sewing and finishing, together with yardage chart, diagram of quilt to help arrange the blocks for single and double bed size, and a diagram of block which serves as a guide for placing the patches and suggests contrasting materials.

Send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) for this pattern to the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Needlecraft Department, Eighth avenue, New York, N. Y.

You Win, Mr. Corrigan

Letter from California asking us to settle a bet makes us hang our head in rather synthetic modesty.

We are sorry to say, Mr. Corrigan, that you win. This writer was the first to burlesque a radio program. It happened in Marlin Springs, Tex. We were down there with John McGraw and his Giants when an attack of appendicitis grabbed us by the ears and tossed us into Doc Wells' sanitarium.

Doc was all for carving us up into a jigsaw barbecue. He was backed in his diagnosis by those famous physicians, Hughie Jennings, Bill Klem, Cozy Dolan, Bill McGhee-han, Will Wedge, Bill Hanna, Frankie Graham and three strangers who happened to be passing the building.

We tossed on that blanket like army dice. We are not opposed to Texas surgery, but had a desire to get back to New York and the family doctor. Finally, we got a reprieve, and managed to sit up and read the New York papers.

Something strange had happened to those papers. They were much thicker than usual. Investigation showed that each one had a radio supplement stuffed in it. During our spring training trip, radio had suddenly spread itself like a free crab eating a cocoanut.

In addition to pages of advertising there were the first radio programs, informing you just what to except every minute of the day and how to avoid it.

Anything important was big enough to burlesque. So we forgot the appendicitis long enough to write what the thwarted geniuses in the Algonquin Hotel would call a satire on the radio programs.

That was the first. Soon as we discovered we were annoying people, we kept it up until exhausted. History proves that if you annoy enough people you will eventually become popular.

At last, we were ourselves and everybody else out on that particular subject and turned to the finer things of life, which include botany, bees and the saving of box tops, string and wrapping paper.

You win your bet, Mr. Corrigan. You win your bet. If the winnings are anything you can divide, we will take half. If you were betting a million-dollar cat against an equally valuable dog, you can keep it all, Mr. Corrigan.

We hope this clears it up for once and for all. And hope to hear from Mr. Corrigan again on something worth while.

Just a minute! If you win the million-dollar dog, you can send us a thousand-dollar flea.

Blind Partisanship

Candidates Guffey and Earle Come Pretty Close to Showing Fanaticism

Loyalty to the principles of their parties is expected of candidates; but to take the stand that "my party can do no wrong and the opposing party can do nothing right" savors of fanaticism.

Joseph F. Guffey, the Democratic nominee for United States Senator, and George H. Earle, the Democratic nominee for Governor, showed greater zeal than good judgment in speeches at Media Tuesday night.

Mr. Earle is quoted as having said that, if he is elected, every Republican on the state payrolls will be replaced by a Democrat.

If that is to be taken literally, it means that a Democratic victory will result in the discharge of thousands of clerks and others in the commonwealth's employ whose duties have nothing whatever to do with politics. It means the spoils system.

It is to be hoped Mr. Earle did not intend his remark to be taken literally. If he did so intend it, the threat was neither good statesmanship nor, in our opinion, good politics.

Mr. Guffey is quoted as having said his only platform was "support of President Roosevelt."

That, too, is carrying partisanship to a mistaken extreme. Much as they admire President Roosevelt, the people of Pennsylvania hardly would wish even a Democratic Senator from this state merely to follow the President's leadership slavishly without ever thinking for himself. A United States Senator should be more than just a "yes-man" or "rubber stamp" for the administration.

Mr. Guffey may conceivably be elected by the simple process of hanging on to President Roosevelt's coat-tails. But it is neither worthy of him nor of Pennsylvania that he should campaign solely as a coat-tail swinger.

Futile Priming

Recovery Has Been Retarded by the Brain Trust's Attack on the Profits System

In all candor the question might be raised why all the extraordinary federal spending has failed thus far to prime the engine of national prosperity.

With various forms of government in the United States spending 40 per cent of the national income, the expected acceleration to business has not yet been accomplished.

Despite lip service to reflation, drastic deflation has recently been registered in the principal speculative market places.

Why has not the program of "managed recovery" meshed?

Those who think exclusively in terms of the technique of money will perhaps answer that the banks sterilized the process of reflation by piling up one billion, eight hundred million dollars in excess reserves instead of employing the new credit potentialities in job-creating commercial loans.

But that is merely to record a statistical fact.

It is important to ascertain the cause.

Bankers are normally guided by the profit motive, and it is obviously more profitable to employ loanable funds than to keep them liquid.

A lack of confidence and a sense of bewilderment on the part of both borrowers and lenders paralyzed credit activities.

While the administration was preaching reflation and reconstruction, the process was impeded by tall radical talk of visionary new dealers.

Just at the time when enterprising employers were expected to regain courage and to expand the demand for labor, college professors in high administrative posts were casting aspersions on the whole profits system and on our very competitive organization of society.

Accordingly, instead of proving a net increment to total economic activity as intended, government projects became to some extent mere replacements for withdrawals or avoidance of private spending and private investment.

An irrelevant zeal for long-term social reform interfered with single-minded devotion to the crucial problem of effecting economic recovery.

Likewise, the insensate demand at Washington for taxes designed to "soak the thrifty" has thwarted recovery.

When progress was made between March and July of last year in narrowing gaps between various groups of prices, business moved forward with unprecedented rapidity.

But the benign process of relatively raising agricultural income was checked a year ago when the NRA was thrust forward with its program for increasing industrial costs and prices.

The adverse effect was to widen price disparities again, and to make it impossible for the great social classes to reemploy one another in normal manner.

It has been computed that, if we are to support a 1929 wage level in the cities, genuine economic balance would call for $1.75 a bushel for wheat; $1 a bushel for corn, and 16 cents a pound for cotton.

Disparities in the price structure, especially between agriculture and industry, and political business baiting, which has been hurtful to confidence, have prevented the priming of the engine through government spending from taking hold.

Moreover, the extreme timidity of the PWA leadership resulted in poor timing of the public works outlays, which should have been rushed to the pick and shovel stage much earlier in order to give business the necessary lift.

At this juncture, realism, rather than ballyhoo, is necessary.

The President should review the measures which make for prosperity, and those which do not.

Once the maladjustments are corrected, prosperity will again be the normal state of the country, which will attain new and unprecedented peaks in respect to average living standards.

Improve the Zoo!

The Humane Society's Reproach Can Be Removed Without Great Outlay of Money

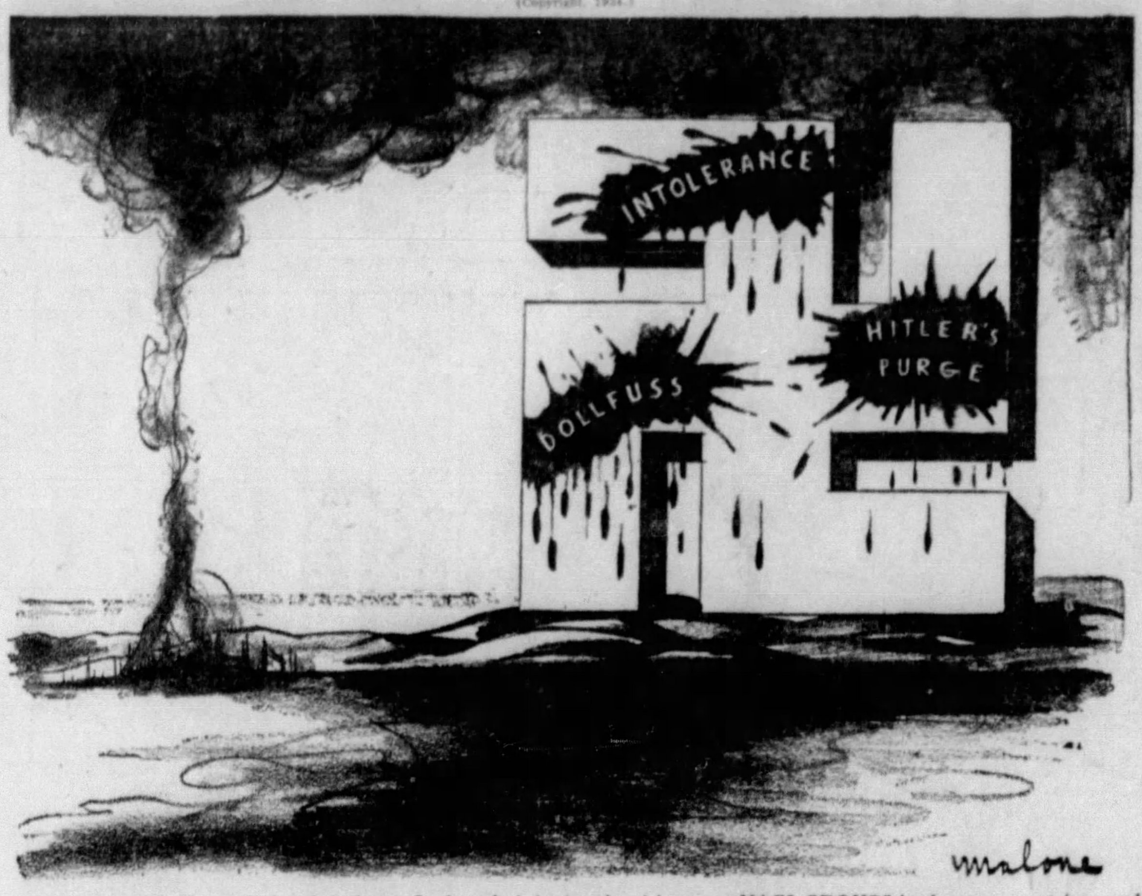
It is disgraceful that conditions have been allowed to become so bad at the municipal zoo at Highland Park that William F. Wentzel, executive secretary of the Western Pennsylvania Humane Society, has felt called upon to demand that the city either improve the establishment or close it.

Certainly conditions ought to be improved at once. The reproach of cruelty to the animals can at least be removed without any great outlay of money. The erection of additional buildings and purchase of new animals can wait if necessary, but there should not be a day's delay in action to make the present denizens of the zoo comfortable.

The zoo should not be abandoned. It renders a definite educational service and is a source of entertainment to thousands. Pittsburgh is well able to continue to maintain the zoo, and to maintain it in a manner that will not bring reproach.

The Soiled Swastika

(Copyright, 1934.)



In Germany the Swastika is triumphant. In Austria it is a fallen emblem.

The German Government has disavowed the Austrian putsch, which began with the assassination of Chancellor Dollfuss and ended with battles in the provinces.

But nobody can deny that a close tie exists and has existed between NAZI GROUPS in the two countries—and responsibility rests SOMEWHERE.

Wherever the blame may lie, when history records its verdict there will be three great blots on the international Nazi escutcheon—first, religious and racial persecutions; second, the "Hitler Purge," a bloody midnight episode that shocked civilization; and third, the murder of Dollfuss.

Plays or Dickens?

By Winifred Black

He TALKED on the radio the other night—Hugh Walpole, the English novelist, and what a relief it was to hear him.

So simple, so honest, so shy and so surprised at the idea of the radio talk and oh, so unaffected and so sort of real, if you know what I mean.

What a lot there is in voices—the instant I heard Walpole's voice I could see him taking his dog out for a walk, and he in rather shabby old tweeds with his pipe in his mouth and an appetite for toast and marmalade and deviled kidneys, and never too busy to write a letter to an old friend—as English as Westminster Abbey and as absolutely natural as a six-month-old baby.

And how he does love Dickens, and how he made you love him for loving Dickens, bless his great, generous, warm, loving, understanding heart.

And Mr. Walpole is helping to direct the screen version of David Copperfield.

Oh, joy, think of seeing Mr. Micawber and Ham and Peggoty and Tommy Traddles! And what fun it will be to hate the two Murdstones with a bitter and abiding hate, and Uriah Heap—there's a good person to hate, with his loathsome green eyes and creepy white hands, and how 'umble he was—oof, I'd like to throw something at him this very minute.

I'm going to go to see David Copperfield if I never enter any kind of a theater again as long as I live.

And then let's have Pip and Miss Havisham and after that the Marchioness and Dick Swivoler and Sallie Brass.

Bring them all back again, you magicians of the screen, and listen to the money clink in the box office.

We're tired of problem plays, we're sick of horrors, we don't care a snap about the gangster and his moll, honestly we don't.

It would be rather nice if we had some good young American who would Dickens up an American play for us, but there doesn't seem to be any "sitch," so let's borrow from Dickens and make the tired old world laugh and cry and be real and natural and human again.

Me for David Copperfield, and blessings on the head of the film company that is going to let us have the fun of getting out of our own stupid, dull, twisted, warped world and into that other one that Dickens gave us.

LISTEN, WORLD!

By Elsie Robinson

'Only a Routine Matter'

It's one of those days. Humdrum . . . drab. Not even one tough, exciting problem to break the monotony. Just, petty, picky little chores. Days like this seem wasted. They wear down your morale more than would a riot.

Yet, through all the colorless hours, one splendid phrase has gone streaming like a great banner . . . carrying me along in spite of myself—

"It was purely a routine matter"—six simple words, yet they voice as brave an act as America has ever seen.

Dr. William Hallock Park, director of New York City's Department of Health laboratories, said those six words. Dr. Park is a brilliant, happy, healthy man. He has friends and loved ones . . . a noteworthy position . . . in short, every reason to wish to live.

Yet, if the "routine matter" to which he refers proceeds to its not improbable conclusion, he may, even as I write, have quietly relinquished all these good things and passed, forever, from the places and the people that he loves. And with him, there may have gone certain others—all warm with life, all eager and proud a few hours since—three of them women.

Six people, each with an abundant life awaiting. Yet, quietly, casually, each one of those persons plunged a needle into his or her arm. In that needle lay the possibility of most hideous death or infirmity—infantile paralysis. What heroic resolution could induce a normal human being to plunge the poisoned secretion of a dying ape into his clean flesh?

No heroic resolution at all. To them, as stated before, it was a "routine matter." Annually, America is swept by an epidemic of infantile paralysis which leaves in its wake a ghastly record of blasted hopes, broken hearts, twisted bodies. At present thousands are living in dread of such a fate. If only a preventive serum can be discovered! But how can one be sure that such a serum is preventive. There is only one way—by testing it on human bodies.

What would that test mean to you, or to me? We chill at the thought. But to those six people it required no more determination, no more fortitude, than they use every day of their lives. They were brave when the test came, not because they decided at that moment to be brave, but because they had always been brave . . . they had always done the thing that had to be done—regardless.

They did not become heroic at 9 p. m., July 12, 1934. They became heroic through a lifetime of petty chores, forgotten sacrifices, unrecorded decisions, "humdrum days that seem wasted."

"A matter of routine"—words like a great, brave banner streaming above the slow, monotonous progress of life. Suddenly, through tears, I saw that heroism is always like that. Not born of a splendid impulse—but the fruit of forgotten things. Christ hanging on the Cross—Socrates drinking the hemlock—Joan burning at the stake—Madame Curie bending over a death-dealing ray. They live forever through their splendid martyrdom because courage had become "a matter of routine."

Rhyming Optimist

By Aline Michaelis

Guadalupe

She waits for me in a sleepy town
On an island in the sea;
The palm trees fashion a verdant crown
About that island, flat and brown
Where Lupe waits for me.

Demure she goes as any nun,
So quiet and so meek;
But my restless heart she has surely won.
For she is summer and the sun,

A part of ocean's nameless charm
Is in her changeful face,
And in her glances, deep and warm;
While her swaying walk and lissome form

On a sun-drenched isle in the sea.
For her love, like the ocean, is strong and deep. . . .
Dear God, in your vaster loving keep
Small Lupe, who waits for me!

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. Mundy

You're inclined to be too confidential with those you claim as friends.

And you should not be deceitful, but there are probably home and family matters that you should never divulge.

Even your most intimate friends have no right to know certain things about yourself and your family.

Other facts are too intimate to discuss outside.

Your closest friends today may become your worst enemies tomorrow, and because of what they know about you they might do you great harm.

If you cannot keep to yourself things which you should consider your secrets, why should you expect other persons to keep these intimate matters to themselves?

The strong reason you might have for keeping silent on personal matters does not work with the same force upon those who come into possession of the facts.

They are likely to circulate the things you tell about yourself.

Back into the real city of Honolulu after a wonderful few days "too few" on the big cattle ranches of the islands. These islands look little on the map but they sure do things big. Nowhere on the mainland, that's what they call the joint where we live, nowhere is there such signs of doing well as there is here. You don't have to be warlike to get a real kick out of our greatest Army post, Schofield Barracks and the Navy at Pearl Harbor. If war was declared with some Pacific nation we would lose the Philippines before lunch but if we lost these it would be our own fault. Yours.

Need Seen for Roosevelt To Allay Apprehension

By James T. Williams, Jr.

WHEN President Roosevelt returns from his Atlantic-Pacific cruise, he will find himself faced with two tremendous problems for which the people will look to him swiftly to find solutions.

The first of these problems that must soon be solved, if the leadership of the President is to grow in strength, is to disarm apprehension about the future program of the administration and bring about a national revival of confidence.

Mr. Roosevelt took a step in this direction by insisting that the members of his cabinet take a real vacation while he was cruising. He wished them to emancipate themselves for a time from departmental routine and, in addition to gaining the other benefits to be derived from a holiday, to regain their perspective.

This some of the cabinet have done and all might well have done. Mr. Roosevelt wished them also, by getting out of Washington, to get closer contact with those Americans in all parts of the country who are not on the federal payroll either as officeholders or as relief recipients. And there are millions of such Americans still left in the country. In fact, they constitute the great body of taxpayers.

By sending the cabinet on vacation and by going on an extended cruise for such a substitute for a vacation as a President is able to get from the arduous duties of his exalted office, Mr. Roosevelt apparently sought also to wean the public from that increasing dependence upon the federal government that is rightly a cause of increasing apprehension.

Reviving Confidence A Difficult Task

BUT reviving confidence after such an experience as the country has been passing through is not an easy task. It will take more than the optimistic speeches of high officials of the administration, more than repeated assurances of good intentions to convince the country that the natural forces of recovery are no longer to be thwarted by the various and sundry federal agencies set up upon the two-fold excuse of promoting recovery and forcing reconstruction.

To revive confidence to the point that will quicken anew the spirit of enterprise, encourage investment and increase employment by other means than federal spending is apt to prove far more effective than the number of speeches its representatives make or the amount of optimistic propaganda its press agents release for publication.

In fact, until the President is able to give the country, over a period of time, a demonstration of his determination that honest business is going to be afforded not only a breathing spell, but a respite for a long time from further governmental interference disguised as regulation, disarming apprehension and reviving confidence will prove a difficult, if not an impossible, undertaking.

The problem next in importance that must soon be solved if the leadership of the President is to continue unimpaired is to check the growth of that federal bureaucracy which threatens to choke the breath out of constitutional government.

Bureaucracy Causes Uneasiness

THE thousands upon thousands of political appointees that have been added to the federal payroll under this administration and the multiplication week after week and month after month of boards and commissions and bureaus and other federal agencies that are greedy alike for more money to spend and more power to compel, is a spectacle which instead of reviving confidence may soon develop apprehension into utter discouragement and dismay.

President Roosevelt can halt this sinister advance and start the demobilization of this vast surplus of tax-eating machinery the day he returns to the White House by the issuance of two executive orders, which he has ample authority under the law to promulgate.

The first of these two orders would direct that every one of the independent executive agencies now operating in the federal city should be transferred to the jurisdiction of an executive department, and thereby become subject to the control of a member of the cabinet.

This transfer would start the reduction in personnel and power that so much needs to be made, but that no member of the cabinet now has authority to make while these independant agencies remain outside his jurisdiction.

Such an order is the first step toward that effective reorganization of the federal government to which President Roosevelt is pledged by the platform on which he was elected.

The other executive order necessary to halt the growth of federal bureaucracy would transfer to the protection of the Civil Service after suitable examination all those federal officers new and old not specifically exempted by law from the classified service and not carrying with it any policy-making function. The issuance of these two orders would deal a body blow to the growth of bureaucracy and go far toward reviving confidence in the future program of the administration.

The Lure of "Buried Treasure" Is Again Brought to Public Attention by an English Lawsuit

By Edwin C. Hill

THROUGH a period of years cable tolls on stories of unsuccessful treasure hunts probably would mount up to a sizeable treasure. From the days of Herod, who went treasure hunting, down to this newspaper deadline, tales of buried treasure have been the endless balance brought forward of folklore and legend, and they have impelled men to delve into the earth and search the depths of the sea—and to dream endless dreams, for here is the golden domain of old romance.

The English lawsuit headlines the sunken treasure of King John, sunk in the Wash, a large tidal bay on the short of Norfolk, in 1216. Sir Frederick Ponsonby sues the American treasure hunter, the wealthy James A. Herbert Boone, charging violation of contract. Three distinguished British archaeologists deserted Mr. Boone when he brought in diviners, with divining rods.

The search goes on, and it may outlast the Magna Charta, which came out of the quicksand just as King John's gold sank into it. For the symbol of gold has been, in the story of man, more enduring than any parchment. All the gold in the world could be contained in a fair sized room, but around it circle all the vast and planetary abstractions of credit and exchange.

Legend and Reality Hard to Separate

THE Knights of Runnymede knew nothing about the gold standard—we have much in common—but they did know about gold, as did Ghengis Khan and Attila and Solomon before them and Sir Montagu Norman after them. Old Fafnir, sitting on his Rheingold, knew what it was all about. Then, as now, legend and reality overlapped in this domain. Mr. Boone's archaeologists are of today and his diviners of yesterday, but the Niebelungen Lied carries down into the white light of today.

Down in Lower Austria, they are all excited because they think they have found, 30 feet underground, some of Siegfried's gold. When Rodmar, the giant, found his son slain, he demanded gold sufficient to cover the boy's skin. The gold was wrested from a demigod, but the demi-god cursed it and decreed that it should sink into the ground, and blast with ill-fortune whoever touched it. Why this curse so often laid on hidden gold? Why did the story of the curse spring to life so readily when the treasure was taken from King Tut's tomb?

But the curse deters none. Not only adventurers, but the rich and great—like Mr. Boone—are as eager to go treasure hunting as any pop-eyed boy who has been reading Treasure Island. Just after the war, an imposing group of powerful New York bankers sunk many thousands of dollars into a syndicate to bring up from the sea bullion and coin sunk a century or more ago. I happened to talk to one of them at the time. There was a febrile excitement in the man never stirred by his work-a-day gleaning of millions in the stock market.

Much Gold Sunk In American Harbors

FROM time to time, elaborate plans are formed to raise the British frigate Hussar, sunk in Hell Gate Sound with $4,000,000 worth of gold brought here to pay British soldiers in the Revolutionary War. In Delaware Bay is the DeBreak, with $5,000,000; off Nantucket light is the Republic, with $2,000,000; in San Francisco Bay, the Rio Janeiro with $9,000,000.

The Mediterranean and the Adriatic would have a floor of golden sequins if the treasure of the sunken ships could be strewn about. The Spanish Main, Central America, Mexico, Bolivia and Southern California are the favored dream lands of the treasure hunters. In the days of Spain's rising power there was a vast amount of loose bullion shifting about these countries, and the doubloons and the moidores of the pirates weren't altogether mythical. No man can trace to their sources the legends which live down through the decades and the centuries.
